A PROSPEROUS BANK.

(From the San Angelo Standard.)

Below we publish the latest statement of that solid and prosperous banking institution, "The San Angelo National Bank, of San Angelo, Texas." It commends itself, and a careful glance over the assets and liabilities will clearly show why none of the stock of the institution is on the market.

In August 1888 the San Angelo National Bank decided to increase its capital stock from five hundred thousand dollars to $1,000,000. The stock was readily taken by men who stand high both at home and abroad, and the subscriptions continued to pour in after the full amount of the capital stock had already been paid in.

At the same time this institution foreseeing the advantages this western country would derive from the change, inaugurated the movement of cheaper money for the West. They made 24 per cent. money a thing of the past, establishing 12 per cent. as the rate of discounts.

The following comparative statement of the business done by the bank for the years 1888, 1889, 1890, will show that its policy has been one of immense benefit to the country at large, and naturally to the bank which originated it:

June 30th, 1888—Deposits, $53,385 41; Loans, $56,540 75; Surplus and profits, $8,911 93.

June 30th, 1889—Deposits, $120,336 72; Loans, $202,662 00; Surplus and profits, $10,842 01.

June 30th, 1890—Deposits, $182,749 35; Loans $214,927 96; Surplus and profits, $19,603 12.

That the San Angelo National is a bank thoroughly identified with the interests of the Concho Country is an established fact. With their ample capital and reserve, and the excellent credit enjoyed by the institution abroad, their customers have found that through good and hard times, they could always rely on an institution ever ready to meet their legitimate requirements.

The directors and officers of the bank are men whose names alone are a guarantee of integrity and fairness. They consist of M. B. Pulliam, president; Albert Raas, cashier; Joseph Spence, Jr., L. Schwarz, F. B. Ewing, and Jos. C. Rias.

When it is remembered that every stockholder is liable for an amount equal to the stock held by him; and every director individually liable to the full extent of his wealth, it will be seen that nowhere can a bank be found of greater financial and moral strength than is enjoyed by the San Angelo National.

As an institution of which the country may justly feel proud and we heartily wish them continued prosperity.

Report of the condition of the San Angelo National Bank at close of business, Thursday, October 24, 1890.

They were the Parry and John Hender son cattle all grass fed and offered here before shipping at $2.00 per head. As it is they will net over $25. The cattle market has an upward tendency and Godair, Harding & Company generally get as good prices as there is out. Several buyers from the St. Louis and Chicago markets are in the city picking up cattle where they can find any.

J. J. Rackley, in bed room suits from $10 to $200.

According to an English authority there is one measurement in cattle which is the key to all measurements of the animal. This is the length of the head. In a well proportioned beast, he says the distance between the hips from centre to centre, from centre of hip-bone to the edge of flank, from centre of hip-bone to centre of rump-bone, from point of hock to the ground, from dewlap to the ground—all these separate measurements should correspond, within an inch, to the length of the head. Well-grown Short-horn three-year-old bullocks, are as a rule, about 22 inches in these respective measurements.

"Hens are funny critters," says an old farmer, "and I have one on my place that is about the funniest of the lot. A few months ago she took a most violent liking for an old brindled cow of mine. At first all she did was to go out to the pasture with the cow, but after a while she began to jump on the cow's back. For a long time the cow resented this novel arrangement and indignantly shook the hen off. But it did not do any good, the hen hopped right on again, until at last, in sheer despair, the cow philosophically accepted the situation. She was probably the more inclined to do so when she discovered, as she soon did, that Biddy, as much as possible, kept all insects from annoying her. In fact, she even went further than that; for when she discovered that the cow would like to have her back scratched she scratched it in a way to make the cow very happy. As a result of this the cow soon began to enjoy the companionship of the hen; and now, when the hen gets off for a while to eat, old Biddle is evidently uneasy until she comes back again."

HE WANTED THE QUARTER.

The Father's Anxiety Was Divided Between His Child and the Coin.

"I have seen some stinky men who I've been in the medical profession, but the latest game I ever saw occurred the other day."

So spoke one of our young doctors engaged in a large dispensary connected with one of the medical schools in the city. The doctor continued: "Much of our work is thankless enough. We experience the greatest difficulty in getting patients to take medicine as they are directed."

"They seem almost to have an idea sometimes that we ought to pay them for taking what is going to cure them. Frequently, when an interesting case comes in while a clinic is going on in college, we take it before the class and show the would be M. D.'s the procedure taken for its relief. The case in question was that of an Italian. He came rushing in with a child about a year old in his arms. Anxiety was depicted on his countenance."

"The little thing had great difficulty in breathing, but retained breath enough to make some howl. Calming the father somewhat, we managed to learn that the child had swallowed a quarter of a dollar, which had stuck in its throat. He asked if we could get it out. We promised to do our best, and, as a clinic was in session, took the child and the father into the pit of the amphitheatre, so that the operation might be performed before the students."

"The professor began work at once for he saw that the child was in a fair way to suffocate. They used for these operations an instrument called a coin catcher, which is made like a croquet mallet, only the mallet is rubber, and the hook on the end of the instrument is longer than that of a croquet mallet. The instrument is to be passed down the throat of the patient, and when the coin is caught, the hook catches under the coin, and is pulled up. At best, it is a very signifying operation, for the child will be signally affected and it is not without danger to the child's life."

"The professor worked on until he saw that the child was in a fair way to suffocate. They used for these operations an instrument called a coin catcher, which is made like a croquet mallet, only the mallet is rubber, and the hook on the end of the instrument is longer than that of a croquet mallet. The instrument is to be passed down the throat of the patient, and when the coin is caught, the hook catches under the coin, and is pulled up. At best, it is a very signifying operation, for the child will be signally affected and it is not without danger to the child's life."

"It became manifest that the loss of his coin had contended with the danger of losing his child to produce his anxiety; and that is why I say it was the meanest thing I ever saw. The boys had one on the professor, though, when he turned and looked for the quarter, and they made the old building shake with their appreciation. The professor caught on and got the man to swap off the recovered quarter for another, while he exhibited it to the class."—New York Evening Sun.

HIS HORRIBLE EXAMPLE.

"REFORMED INEBRIATE'S" TORM WITH COUGH.

He Traveled in England for Three Years With a Bottle of Whisky in His Hip Pocket—John B. Gough's Terrible Temptation.

"Yes, gentlemen, I carried a pint bottle of whisky in my pocket for fifteen years and never drank a drop of it," said Milo Bosworth, a well-known citizen of Cleveland, Ohio. "When I was a young fellow I drank pretty hard, in fact I got married I thought it was time to call a halt. I went down to Chagrin Falls on a little business, and before I came home I stopped at Board's grocery, as was my custom, and had my flask filled. I had made up my mind that that would be the last liquor I would drink for fifteen years; but when I got into my wagon I fell to thinking about the matter and came to the conclusion that there was no time like the present and I just put that bottle in my hip pocket, and there I carried it for fifteen long years, and during that time I never touched a drop of liquor of any kind."

"Well, about twelve years after that, Gough, the great temperance orator, was advertised to speak in Cleveland. The posters informed us that the meeting would be held in the Presbyterian church. You young fellows probably never heard of that church. It was a large, wooden structure, and stood on the site of the Old Stone church. Of course we attended the meeting which occurred on the Sabbath, and I kinder took a notion to Gough, and asked him to go home and see with us. He accepted, and after I took out the bottle I had carried for twelve years and asked him to take a drink. I just said, 'Well, you see, I've carried that bottle with me for fifteen years, and you ought to see that man. He turned first to the bottle, and finally gasped and said: 'Put it up, I can't stand it. Put it up, I say, before I disgrace myself. I was frightened, and put the flask in my pocket in a hurry. He didn't say anything for several minutes, but sat with his head between his hands. Finally he looked up and said: 'My friend, I am truly sorry that I should display my weakness in your house, but sometimes I have an uncontrollable desire for liquor, and when I saw your flask I would have given my life for a drink. But, he continued, I understood you to say that you had carried that bottle and not drank anything for twelve years?'"

"That is true," I said, and then I proceeded to tell him of the circumstances of my swearing off. When he heard me through he said: 'You are just the man I am looking for, and I want you to go to England with me.' Of course I was taken by surprise, and asked him to explain. He said that he had long wanted a reformed drunkard to travel with him and lecture, and that a man with my will was just the chap he desired. Well, I talked the matter over with my wife, and she said that she guessed that she could spare me for a year or so, and the upshot of the thing was that Gough and I forged a partnership whereby I was to receive a handsome percentage of the receipts, and we started out."

"Albany was the first place where we were to lecture, and I felt you there was a crowd there to hear us. Gough had advertised the reformed drunkard feature for all it was worth, and I was regarded with much curiosity as the dime museum freaks are to-day. From Albany we went to Boston and finally to New York, where we bid good-bye to America and set sail for England. A stop was made in Ireland, and in Dublin the largest hall in the city wouldn't hold the people. I gave those who were on the outside tickets and had them come the next night."

"One way of running the lecture was to have Gough make an opening speech, after which he would introduce me as the reformed drunkard. I would step forward, and as a starter would slap down my whisky bottle on the table and tell the audience how long I had carried it. After that we would call for people to come forward and sign the pledge, and there were dozens who complied every night. In England we were very successful and we remained there three years. At the end of that time I was getting a little homesick and wanted to see my family. So I told Gough that I guessed I would quit and we looked over the books and settled up. I had eleven thousand dollars coming to me and I brought every cent of it back to Cleveland and deposited it in the old bank down on Canal street. After that I carried my flask and did not drink any of the contents for a few weeks."

Speaking of Gough, he said: "He was a great orator and grand, noble man, but he was not master of himself. I remember, one time, when a man put some whisky in a glass of soda water he was about to drink. Just that taste was enough to set the appetite afire within him and he went off on a protracted spree. Very few people ever know of this, but it is true nevertheless, and the fact is related in one of his biographies. When he came out of it I never saw a man feel so in all my life. He cried like a baby, and vowed he would never speak before an audience again, and if I remember rightly he canceled his engagements for the rest of that year. He has told me many times when passing saloons mounted on a horse, he had dug the spurs into the beast's flanks and ridden for miles at breakneck speed to get out of reach of the temptation."

Fun with a Newly-Married Couple.

An incident occurred on a Western train as it bowed merrily over the prairie in the direction of Milwaukee that was cruel and yet laughable in the extreme. A newly married couple, so very, very newly married, got on the train at Chicago and took a front seat in the car, where each passenger could watch their very action. The groom was a tall, bony individual, one of the silk hat, Prince Albert coat grooms, with a white dress tie at his throat and a white rose in his buttonhole. A regular well-to-do country cross roads dude and the very atmosphere in his vicinity was permeated with the aroma of new mown hay. The bride was dressed in white, wearing white gloves, and her hands and a large bouquet lay in her lap. Her face was a dead ringer for a mask and was homely enough to ache, but this did not seem to trouble the groom, who was snuggled up as close to her as he could get. So deeply were they wrapped up in each other that they were entirely unconscious of the fact that they were the observed of all observers and especially of a party of traveling men who sat in the way back of them. The groom would whisper some sweet nothing in the bride's ear and she, with a becoming blush, would turn and beam upon him, showing to the passengers while doing so a nose that protruded from her face like a tumor. Oh, she was homely!

Finally, as the night waxed on apace, the two young things began to grow more cozy-cozy, and as the train pulled out of Wisconsin, Keaton stretched forth his long arm and wound it tenderly about his bride's neck. Upon seeing this every drummer in the party began to whistle, while one evil-minded individual with a State street jangled "Break away!" With a painful sigh that could be heard all over the car, the poor groom slowly took his arm away and again the couple fell to whispering. The whispering was continued for a number of minutes, and then, when the groom thought every body behind him was asleep, he once more placed his arm lovingly about the woman's neck. As before the action was followed by whistling and shouts, and again with a sigh the arm was removed. Poor fellow! the writer felt sorry for him, but those heartless drummers would have their way, and the above scene was repeated time after time. Finally the bride, although tired out, rested her head on her husband's manly breast and he had just begun to smooth her tresses when the crowd once more opened up and made this night hideous with their noise. This was too much for the bride and with a sob she buried her face in her handkerchief and wept. The groom was visibly startled at this and in spite of the whistling of the crowd proceeded to pet and soothe the wounded feelings of the dear one at his side, but the more he soothed her the more she wept. He looked around him for the first time since the train started and at just the right moment to catch a man in the act of whistling. Deliberately arising from his seat he approached the man with a word slipped him across the mouth with his hand clenched hand. The man started to jump up, but the injured groom gave him another look, that sent him leaping into his seat again, where he was glad to remain. Then turning to the balance of the passengers he addressed them thus: "Fellers, maybe I do look a little bit queer and I'll admit that I'm a little bit new in this marrying business, consequently have overlooked your insults, but it has gone far enough now. You wasn't satisfied with me for the little man and clean through, I am going back to my seat now, and my wife shall lay her head on my shoulder till we reach Milwaukee, and the first son-of-a-gun that dares to unfold his yawn will get jumped on by yours truly. If more than one makes a noise, so much the better, for I am in prime condition and once I commence, I'll lick every man in the car."

At the close of his little address, he walked back to his seat, and something to the sobbing woman and she, with a proud look in her eyes, laid her head on his shoulder. Not a man in the car dared open his head after that and the couple came to Milwaukee in peace.—Peck's Sun.

Lost to Sight. Gen. Sheridan was not a tall man though he had a commanding presence. While he was an under officer he was one day drilling a company and was annoyed by the unsoldierly appearance of a tall, round shouldered Irish recruit. "Don't stand in that way," Sheridan finally exclaimed. "You look like a Chinaman doubled over a washtub. Straighten up—form—erect chest out and chin elevated. Like this!"

Then the officer gave the man a superb example of the perfect soldier in parade movement, his eyes fixed unalterably forward from earthy things. "An' its straight ahid I'll be after lookin' all the time!" asked the recruit, glancing down at his superior officer, with a twinkle in his eye. "Yes; if you mean to be a respectable soldier, certainly."

The Irishman pulled himself out like a pigeon, and something of the measured "Right!" "Oho!" he exclaimed, "Well, good-bye to ye, let tenant; I'll never see ye agin." Youth's Companion.

He Fished and Slept. At Hannibal, Mo., a colored man named Wilson fished from a bridge. As he fished he slept, and as he slept he pitched forward into the stream and never rose to the surface. When they recovered his pole and line there was a twenty-five pound catfish on the hook. Some men are at ways too late for good luck.—Detroit Free Press.

CREDIT BROKERS.

Merchants Through Whom a Man Can Get Anything on Trust.

"A what?" "A credit broker. Didn't you ever hear of a credit broker? Well, it is a new business, to be sure, this credit brokerage, but it is an active one." An uptown business man adjusted his eyeglasses to read a little card he held in his hand and proceeded to disclose to a reporter some of the mysteries of this new trade. "Lots of folks, you know," he continued, "haven't much money." The reporter agreed that there might be some people in this condition. "The absence of a large income does not relieve them from the desire to live comfortably and keep up a good appearance on a small salary. They have to go in debt or buy things on the installment plan. Some people are not well enough known to get credit from the regular old established firms. It is to the relief of such people the credit broker comes. If you want a suit of clothes, made to order or 'hand me down,' he will send you to a first class place where you can present his card and get what you want without further question, though the merchant may never have seen you before. He will then give you an order to some furniture dealer, if you want, and you can have your house furnished and fitted out on the same terms. Or with his indorsement you can have your children fitted with new store clothes and you can get shoes for yourself, your wife and all the little ones without any ready money. You can get a watch and seal ring for yourself and earrings for your wife. If you are a carpenter or workman of any sort you can get tools in the same simple way. In short, you can get anything you want. You can even get your teeth filled or an aching molar dislocated. You can be fitted out with a new suit of clothes, a better hat and cane, shoes, staid, a watch and chain and all the other jewelry necessary to the complete outfit of a gentleman, besides fresh fine clean collar and cuffs, stiff billed shirt and enough at home for a change—you can get all these things on credit, though your face and name are not known to a merchant in town, if you have an order from the credit broker."

"The business is started in this way. A man who has enough means to make his credit good with merchants has a large circle of friends whom he knows to be honest and reliable, but who have no credit with merchants, not being known. With this to start on he decides to become a credit broker. He gets up a list of reputable merchants in various lines and makes an arrangement with them under which they are to give credit to any one presenting an order from him and are to pay him a commission on the trade, he being responsible for the debt. He then gives orders to his friends and acquaintances who want to buy on credit, but have no acquaintance with dealers in the things they want. They buy their goods and pay him in installments or spot down at a certain time. The man entering into this business must of course know the men he is trusting, but having a large circle of acquaintances he can easily determine whom of them he can trust, and can get enough regular and reliable customers to make him a good business. A man in one of the departments or in any business establishment where a great many persons are employed may work up a good business as a credit broker. The man whose card I hold here has gone regularly into the business as a credit broker. He has arrangements with some ten or fifteen reliable business houses, to which he sends his patrons and from which he gets a good commission on every sale upon his order. He makes from $150 to $250 per month out of the business and very seldom makes a bad debt."—Washington Star.

A Prince's Antics. The prince of Parma maintained great state in his small principality, and by the aid of the Austrians, very despotic authority. His little army was entirely under his own military code. His punishment of the officers was at times original. One of them consisted in compelling them to carry pails of water from one well to another, 800 or 400 yards distant. He insisted that the entire absence of any useful purpose in this disagreeable task added greatly to its unpleasantness, in which he was not far wrong. His practical jokes did not add to the dignity or comfort of his court. I was present at a grand ball when he ordered a large plate of strong mustard sandwiches to be handed round with his compliments at supper time to the most dignified of the great ladies, who coughed and gesticulated painfully when they tasted the pungent mixture.—Blackwood's.

A Nest Swindled. A peculiarly suspicious individual named Mack was in charge of the City hall cigar store, when two dapper looking young men entered. One carried in his hand an envelope, which was addressed, but not sealed. "Can you give me a ten dollar note for these ten bills?" he asked. "The old lady wants to send the money in this letter."

The ten dollar bill was immediately given to the young man, who apparently put it in the letter. Mack counted the bills given in exchange and found only nine there. "There is only $9 in this," said he. "Oh, how can that be?" said the young man. "The old lady must have made a mistake. I put the $10 in this letter and have sealed it. I don't want to open the envelope again. Will you just hold the letter with the $10 and I will take the $9 to the old lady."

Mack thought that fair enough, as he believed he saw the young man put $10 in the envelope. He still holds it. It is addressed to "H. Ed Idme, Binghamton, N. Y." It was not long before Mack opened it, but blank paper was all contained.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Postage Stamps Good Until Used. Persons having old postage stamps sometimes think they are rendered worthless by the issue of new ones. This is not so. The only obsolete stamps are those of the issues of 1847 and 1851, very few of which are now in existence in the north, and these are generally worth more than their face value for collectors. The issues of 1861, 1869 and 1870 are as good in the payment of postage as the new issues. The reason the issues of 1847 and 1851 are not accepted is because large amounts of these were outstanding in the south at the time of the rebellion, and the present holders of them probably secured them without rendering an equivalent to Uncle Sam.—Hartford Courant.

King Leopold and Queen Victoria. King Leopold of Belgium speaks and writes English with ease and accuracy. He never lets a Sunday pass without writing an autograph letter to his friend and ally, Queen Victoria. Whenever he travels he takes with him his confidential English attendant, Mr. Charles Murray, who has been in his service nearly a quarter of a century. Although the king of the Belgians has aged perceptibly during the past ten years, he has never lost the equanimity of temper which made him so popular in his youth. The king is now 55 years of age, but his health is good and he expects to live many years more.—New York World.

A PROSPEROUS BANK. (From the San Angelo Standard.)

Below we publish the latest statement of that solid and prosperous banking institution, the San Angelo National Bank, of San Angelo, Texas. It commends itself, and a careful glance over the assets and liabilities will clearly show why none of the stock of the institution is on the market.

In August 1888 the San Angelo National Bank decided to increase its capital stock from forty-five thousand dollars to $100,000. The stock was readily taken by men who stand high both at home and abroad, and the subscriptions continued to pour in after the full amount of the capital stock had already been paid in.

At the same time this institution foreseeing the advantages this western country would derive from the change, inaugurated the movement of cheaper money for the West. They made 24 per cent. money a thing of the past, establishing 12 per cent. as the rate of discounts.

The comparative statement of the business done by the bank for the years 1888, 1889, 1890, will show that its policy has been one of immense benefit to the country at large, and naturally to the bank which originated it:

June 30th, 1888—Deposits, $53,386.41; Loans, $56,709.75; Surplus and profits, $8,911.93.

June 30th, 1889—Deposits, $120,336.72; Loans, $202,162.50; Surplus and profits, $10,542.01.

June 30th, 1890—Deposits, $182,749.85; Loans $214,927.93; Surplus and profits, $19,603.12.

That the San Angelo National is a bank thoroughly identified with the interests of the Concho Country is an established fact. With their ample capital and reserve, and the excellent credit enjoyed by the institution abroad, its customers have found that through good and hard times, they could always rely on an institution ever ready to meet their legitimate requirements.

The directors and officers of the bank are men whose names alone are a guarantee of integrity and fairness. They consist of M. B. Pulliam, president; Albert Raas, cashier; Joseph Spence, Jr., L. Schwarz, F. B. Ewing, and Jos. C. Raas.

When it is remembered that every stockholder is liable for an amount equal to the stock held by him; and every director individually liable to the full extent of his wealth, it will be seen that nowhere can a bank be found of greater financial and moral strength than is enjoyed by the San Angelo National.

As an institution of which the country may justly feel proud and we heartily wish them continued prosperity.

Report of the condition of the San Angelo National Bank at close of business, Thursday, October 24, 1890.

John A. Loomis and Charles Rueff start to-day with a retinue of servants and 21 hunting dogs, for a six weeks' hunt on the Pecos and Devil's rivers. They will make their first stop for "business" at Pecan Springs, 8 miles below Beaver Lake, and are prepared to encounter all classes of game from bear, panther, Mexican lion, deer and antelope down to quail.

Glasscock & Bradford have located a ranch directly west of the Vermont pasture in Schleicher county, getting as near as possible to the new town.

Mike Murphy, of DEVIL'S RIVER NEWS, was in the city Monday doing a little rustling on his own account, his brother, Steve Murphy, late of Toronto looking out for the plant in the meantime.

The two train loads of cattle shipped by Wm. H. Godair to Godair, Harding & Company Chicago, last week were sold at $2.80 to $3.10 being the highest price paid this season. These were the Parry and John Henderson cattle all grass fed and offered here before shipping at $2.00 per head. As it is they will net over $25. The cattle market has an upward tendency and Godair, Harding & Company generally get as good prices as there is out. Several buyers from the St. Louis and Chicago markets are in the city picking up cattle where they can find any.

J. J. Rackley, has had room suits from $10 to $200.

According to an English authority there is one measurement in cattle which is the key to all other measurements of the animal. This is the length of the head. In a well proportioned beast, he says the distance between the hips from centre to centre, from centre of hip-bone to centre of rump-bone, from point of hock to the ground—all these separate measurements should correspond, within an inch, to the length of the head. Well-grown Short-horn three-year-old bullocks, are as a rule, about 22 inches in these respective measurements.

Buy your lumber from J. W. Webb & Co., San Angelo, and have your house built at once.

Dr. J. F. Riggs, over the postoffice, San Angelo, is a fine surgeon dentist of 20 years experience, and guarantees his work to be first-class. When in need of a dentist call and see him.

"Hens are funny critters," says an old farmer, "and I have one on my place that is about the funniest of the lot. A few months ago she took a most violent liking for an old brindled cow of mine. At first all she did was to go out to the pasture with the cow, but after a while she began to jump on the cow's back. For a long time the cow resented this novel arrangement and indignantly shook the hen off. But it did not do any good, the hen hopped right on again, until at last, in sheer despair, the cow philosophically accepted the situation. She was probably the more inclined to do so when she discovered, as she soon did, that Biddy, as much as possible, kept all insects from annoying her. In fact, she even went farther than that; for when she discovered that the cow would like to have her back scratched she scratched it in a way to make the cow very happy. As a result of this the cow soon began to enjoy the companionship of the hen; and now, when the hen gets off for a while to eat, old Bridle is evidently uneasy until she comes back again."
