With no landing net how are you to secure a fish, either where the banks are steep and grassy or where you have to wade far out from the beach? The first problem occurs in the Test and most southern streams; the second in large waters like the Tweed and Eden. In the former case you bring your trout to submission, but how are you to lay hands on him? The moral victory is yours. You have beguiled and dominated a subtle and spirited opponent. But the base world refuses to credit the triumph unless you have the trout to show. Generally you bring him to the edge of the bank and then try, very he gives a plunge, the hook leaves its hold and off he goes. The object referred to by such a reso nant title was a little mass of black and gold beads stretched on one corner of the case on a heap of sawdust. Presently the mass became movable, a leg stretched itself out at one end, and the helio, etc., stood revealed as one of the largest lizards ever hatched. The animal is about sixteen inches in length and of genuine Falstafflan girth. The skin is covered with beautifully shaped scales, and, like Jacob's ewes, spotted and ring streaked. The shape of the spots is wonderfully regular, bearing a strong resemblance to the black and gold wall paper of a dado. The tail is long and thicker than that of most lizards. Round it ran three or four rings of gold. The head is broad and flat, with protuberances which conceal the tiny eyes when viewed from above. "You are not obliged to call him Helioderma horridum all the time," said Mr. Giles. "Some people call him Helioderma suspectum and other the Gila monster. Leall him Tommy. Here. "Perpendiculars." A Cambridge student once told me that the parties which the dons gave the undergraduates were called "Per pendiculars" by the latter, because the fear of offending their high mightinesses SONORA, the dons, nor did they venture to speak unless spoken to. I have never visited Cambridge, but not long ago I was at a perpendicular in New Yor's and felt with terror that this was the coming vogue If all we go to another's house for is to eat and drink, might not the would be host send his would be guests orders on Delmonico, and save himself the trouble of turning his home into a restaurant? If the desire to see finery is what influences us, had we not better go to the opening of one of the court dressmakers and milliners who are crowding to our shores? But if the object is an hour's pleasant intercourse with other human beings, then, in the name of common sense, let us talk to one another. The conversation at teas and parties has never been noted for brilliancy, or supercilious silence. By it we reflect on the entertainer's judgment in the choice of friends, and never should we cast such a doubt on his selection of ourselves. -- Harper's Bazar. Prices of Paper in Boston and New York. The proper way to buy writing paper is by the pound. It is always sold in that way in the east, and the result is a saving of something over 50 per cent to the purchaser, while the dealer makes still a profit large enough for him to live and conduct his business in the most substantial manner. "Bond" papers and "Overland mail" papers are cheaper purchased by the pound than inferior paper by the quire. The best quality of bond paper sold in Boston is only ninety cents a pound, and a pound contains 146 sheets, or over six quires of paper. The same paper is sold at fifty cents and more a quire in New York city. It seems impossible that this difference should exist, but it does, and it pays to send to Boston for letter paper and pay the expressage here, in spite of J, T. WILSON. the increase in the rates of express. If people are not in a hurry it is well to send by freight. - New York Tribune. - Alt Seconded Her Motion. A number of ministers at Clarksville were relating their experience the other day. One of them said that, while he was preaching a sermon some time ago, an old lady in the congregation arose, and exclaimed: "Merciful father, if I had one more feather in my wing of faith, I would fly off to glory A worthy brother immediately replied: "Good Lord, stick it in and let her go; she's but a trouble here." That quieted the old lady. - Atlanta Constitution. Reciprocal Favors. "Your back hair is coming down." "Thanks; your front teeth are drop
