STILL-HUNTING FOR BUFFALO. The Indiana Disguised Themselves In Wolf Pelts and Crept on the Herds. Little Bear came to my tent just ed, wrinkled as I had finished my steak, biscuit on purposes bold, and coffee. He brought two wolfskin disguises, which I had before seen in his teepse. Each was made of two wolf pelts sewed together, with mounted nose and tail, and there were armholes with short skin sleeves, and loggings for the thighs, which came nearly down to the knees, the whole covering fastened to the body with deerskin thongs. He had before promised to take me on a "wolf hunt" after buffalo, With a forehead which thinking has wrinkled and he now put on the largest of the front of my tent, showing the various attitudes of the wolf in sham-certain bold exploit. It is not gold, nor silver, nor yet precious gems, but ivory-the finest ivory in the world. Mines of it exist, in which are stored quantities of this valuable substance well nigh inexhaustible. This is no idle tale designed to inflame the imagination. It is cold fact, resting upon indisputable authority. Let the most adventurous spirit take advantage of the information which § given by the famous Lieutenant Schuetze, who was HAMMOND, Table Grove, Illinois. sent by the United States government to bring back to this country the bodies of De Long and his companions after the Jeannette disaster. These ill fated men, it will be remembered, perished of starvation and cold in the Lena delta. The Lena group of islands known as New Siberia. It is on these islands that the ivory mines are to be found.

The Lena, however, has not one but many mouths. Its delta covers an area of 5,000 square miles. This frozen region was thoroughly explored by Lieutenant Schuetze in his search for the bodies. Later he visited them again, bringing several thousand dollars' worth of gifts, which were sent by Uncle Sam. Thus he secured their confidence, and they spoke to him of many things which they never had communicated to any other stranger. They even told him about the ivery mines and showed him some tusks.

They were mainmoth tusks. The ivory mines are deposits of the tusks of mammoths that lived in that region thousands of years ago. All over northern Siberia these huge animals roamed in vast herds. The climate at that time was comparatively mild. But there came a suddon change. Fierce winter swept over the land-a winter permanent and destined never again to resign its sway. The mammoths sought while Dover went as third in com- tanco?' shelter in the valleys, where they huddled together until, overwhelmed by snowdrifts, they lay down to die beneath fleecy avalanches which were finally transformed into solid ice.
