Well Satisfied. Clean and Healthy.
Sonora, Tex., May 13, 1895.—Morris, Little & Son, Brooklyn, N.Y., Gentlemen:—I have dipped about 11,000 head of very scabby sheep in your Little's patent powder dip, and take pleasure in recommending it to all sheepmen who have scab in their flocks. I have used a good many dips, including Chamberlain's, but your dip is the best I ever used. It is safe, and does not hurt the sheep. It is clean and healthy. Very truly, F. A. Manzanaras.

CHINESE POEMS.
THE POET.
You ask what my soul does away in the sky;
I inwardly smile, but I cannot reply.
Like the peach blossom carried away by the stream,
I soar to a world of which you cannot dream.
—Li T'ai-Po.

SOLITUDE AMONG THE HILLS.
The birds have all flown to their roost in the tree,
The last cloud has just floated lastly by,
But we never tire of each other, not we,
As we sit there together, the mountains and I.
—Li T'ai-Po.

AT THE TOP OF A MOUNTAIN.
Upon this tall peak's peak
My hands can nigh th' stars enclose;
I dare not raise my voice to speak
For fear of startling God's repose.
—Tsang Ts'ien.

THOUGHTS ON THE VIEW FROM AN OIL TOWER.
The story of a thousand years
In one brief morning lies unfolded,
Though other voices cease the earth,
'Tis still the moonlit tower of old.
The heroes of the past are dead,
Yet still the fever blast one hears,
And still the plum rain patters on.
'Twas here ambition marched sublime
(An empty fame scarce marks the spot);
Away, * * * for I will never climb
To see the flowers bloom and man forgot!
—Anonymous.

REGRETS.
My eyes saw not the men of old;
And now their age away has rolled
I weep—to think I shall not see
The heroes of posterity.
—Ch'en Tzu-Ang.
—Nineteenth Century.

Mr. Carlyle.
It soon became a habit to watch for the familiar carriage and either to welcome Mrs. Carlyle for a visit or to go with her for a drive. She often came to me on Sunday afternoon. One wet and dreary day I was sitting alone when the bell rang. I gladly ran to answer it and saw a strange gentleman standing there, but looking beyond him I saw the dear face smiling at me from the carriage window. I was eagerly dashing forward, but was peremptorily waved back, with orders to get my bonnet and outfit out. Mr. George Cooke was our companion, and in spite of the wind and rain we were all very bright and merry, Mrs. Carlyle taking my hand and holding it in hers for a great part of the time.

The day she and Miss Jewsbury came I had seen Punch's Christmas Almanack, and on its cover were likenesses of all the principal literary people, very comical and funny, with absurd doggerel couplets describing them. Among these I spied Carlyle and Tyndall together. Carlyle was in full Scotch costume. In one hand he carried a child's spade and pail, and with the other he was throwing peas and covering his shoulder, and the lines were these:

Carlyle, having finished 'Friedrich' altogether,
Is off to Scarborough to spend the summer weather.
Oh, how she laughed, and how delighted she was! "The first time Punch has taken any notice of him," she said. Another time Mrs. Carlyle said: There is something in the carriage for you. Run and look." I found there a large blue china plate, still happily in my possession.—Blackwood's Magazine.

A Keen Witted Woman.
Lord Waterford used to tell some good stories of his experience as an Irish magistrate. One of them referred to the case of a woman whom he had to sentence for a breach of the peace. He let her off on condition that she should find two securities of £10 each that she would keep the peace for six months.

"Thank ye, my lord," said she, moving toward the door.
"No, no," said Lord Waterford, "you must name your securities that I may see whether they are satisfactory."
"Faith, and who would I name," she answered, "but your lordship's self? Yer good enough for two," a retort which not only showed the sprightliness of the Irish character, but in addition the feeling of friendly confidence which the Irish peasantry who knew him cherished for the Lord of Curraghmore.—Pearson's Weekly.

The Magna Carta.
The Magna Carta was written with ordinary black ink on very heavy parchment. It is a curious fact, as stated by an eminent English historian, that of all the barons who signed that most important document not one could write other than his signature, and only two were able to write even that.

Precepts and maxims are of great weight, and a few useful ones at hand do more toward a wise and happy life than whole volumes of cautions that we know not where to find.—C. Simmons.

The vellela, a species of jellyfish, is a natural raft, having a membrane which, when erected and spread, serves as a sail.

OLD FASHIONS IN FUNERALS.

The Cherished Coffin Boards of New England Families a Half Century Ago.
"A ready made coffin is a thing I never saw until I was a grown man," said the reminiscence person, who is not so very old either. "I was brought up in a small village in Vermont, where a broadcloth coffin with silver trimmings would have created as much wonder and speculation as a cable car. If such a coffin had strayed into the neighborhood, it would doubtless have been placed upright in some one's best room and been used as a cabinet for choice bits of china, its funeral purpose remaining undreamed of."

"Each farmer saved from his cutting of timber a few of the finest boards. Especial attention was given to the seasoning and finish, and they were then stacked away until the time when they should be needed. There was always rivalry among the neighbors as to who had the finest coffin boards in his loft. They would no more think of using the coffin boards for any other purpose than they would of wearing the clothes which had been put away in the cedar chest for them to be laid out in."

"Owing to the uncertainty as to the time when they might be called for, nothing more could be done toward making the coffins than to have the boards ready. Men were too thifty in those days to run any risk of making up a coffin and then having it a misfit, and it was generally conceded that a man's last conversation with the minister should not be accompanied by the unmistakable sound of hammering from the barn. So the coffin making had to be left until all was over. When my greatuncle died, I remember, father and my elder brothers staid up all night making his coffin."

"Who did the laying out? Oh, there was at least one woman in the village who was first class at that sort of thing—generally a tailress or seamstress—and was always on hand. She took right hold and did everything—made the shroud, gave advice about the latest style in mourning, saw the callers if she was allowed to. Generally the family took a mournful pleasure in performing that duty themselves. This self appointed undertaker never expected any remuneration for her services, though she didn't object if after next shearing you sent around enough wool for a new dress, provided you were perfectly able to do so."

"No, the shroud wasn't of homespun linen. That was one time when a man was allowed to wear 'store clothes,' though all his life he had worn homespun linsey woolsey shirts, home woven natural gray trousers and cowhide boots made by the traveling cobbler. He was buried in a white shroud of the finest muslin which his means afforded and the village store could furnish. There was nothing brief about the remarks of the minister. The service usually took a good two hours. We always had a regular sermon. It gave the minister an opportunity to expostulate with backsliders such as he never had in church, for the most irreligious man in town would turn out for a funeral."

"Flowers? Where should they get them? Nobody had time to bother over posy beds, and if they did happen to have a few hollyhocks and marigolds scattered in among the 'garden sass' you couldn't get them to pick them for love or money. So flowers were unfashionable, and there was no need of requesting friends not to send them."

"Hearse? Well, not unless you use so high sounding a name for a box wagon with two board seats across it for the bearers. The coffin was placed on the bottom under their feet. There was generally some one in the neighborhood that had such a wagon, and the neighbors were free to borrow it. At other times it was used for hauling barrels."—New York Tribune.

Blacklava and Chancellorsville.
Your interesting reference to the Crimean war brings to mind Tennyson's lines, which have immortalized the "Charge of the Light Brigade."

No one who was present in the ranks, as was the writer, can well forget the opening fire of Stonewall Jackson's 20,000 veterans, when he surprised Hooker's right after sunset at Chancellorsville in 1863. This wing of the army rolled back upon itself with frightful loss and confusion by the advancing rush of the Confederates. For a time the worst fears were entertained by those who were in immediate command of the Union forces.

At this moment Major Keenan, with about 300 cavalry, was ordered to the charge "to hold the enemy back at all cost" until the guns, then "parked on the hill," were "placed" to save the army. The order was well understood by this brave officer, and immediately executed, 300 against "twice 10,000 gallant foes." Keenan's command was annihilated, "nor came back one his wounds to tell."—Letter in Kearney Republican.
