BOTH MILLS AND PATTON BOUND OVER TO ACTION OF GRAND JURY AT GRAHAM.

HABEAS CORPUS ACTION

Mills' Attorneys Will Institute Proceeding to Secure His Release Under Bond.

District Attorney P. A. Martin received a telephone message from Graham Saturday informing him that the preliminary hearing of Mills and Patton, the two young men held at Graham in connection with the death of the former's father, C. C. Mills, near Delknap in Young county, about three weeks ago, had resulted in both being remanded to jail without bail to await the action of the Young county grand jury.

The grand jury will not convene at Graham until in September and it is understood that the attorneys for Mills will institute an action for habeas corpus immediately for his release under bond and that the proceedings will be held before Judge Carrigan here this week.

Townsite Commissioner Visits Eschitt. Last Thursday Colonel Miller, chairman, and Prof. Bunton, secretary of a government commission which had set out and sold the townsites in the Big Pasture, both of Fort Sill, arrived in Eschitt for the purpose of acquainting themselves with the conditions here. It is needless to say they found them in a bad enough shape, perhaps much worse than they anticipated, but we are still alive and have an ally in our town lots.

Col. Miller, in answer to a question, stated that he received a wire from Washington instructing them to come here, make an investigation and ascertain, as nearly as possible, just what our people most desired.

A mass meeting of our people was called to allow the commissioners to tell them the purpose of their visit. The attendance was good.

The commission told us that they were here to help us to better our condition.

Our needs and desires were made known and Col. Miller stated he would make his report accordingly and forward the same to the department of the Interior at Washington.

SIXTIETH CONGRESS CLOSURES ITS SESSION

Washington, D. C., May 30.—Just ten minutes officially before the hands of the big round clock in the chamber of the two houses pointed to the hour of midnight the first session of the Sixtieth Congress came to a close. In the house the closing hours were characterized by the singing of songs by republicans in honor of Speaker Cannon and by democrats in the interest of C. W. J. Bryan. The excitement, which was great at times, finally subsided and the session closed with good fellowship among the members. The senate was extremely quiet during the closing hours, held together only by the necessity of remaining in session for the engrossing and signing of bills. The last days of the senate will be memorable on account of the filibuster of Messrs. LaFollette, Stone and Gore against the emergency currency bill, by the remarkable interpretations of the rules, which go far to establish closure, in a body noteworthy for the freedom of debate, and by the final passage of the currency bill.

President Roosevelt and several of his cabinet were at the capitol during the evening. The president left the White House at 8:50 p. m. for the capitol to sign the bills passed in the last moment of congress and arrived at the capitol at 9 o'clock. He went immediately to the president's room on the senate side, where he remained in readiness to sign the bills as passed.

Signs the Currency Bill.
The president shortly before 10 o'clock signed the compromise currency bill and presented the pen he used in affixing his signature to Representative Wilson of Chicago. Previous to affixing his signature to the currency bill the president had handed it to Secretary Cortelyou, who carefully read its provisions. Two other members of the cabinet were present, Secretaries Root and Garfield. The president, in conversing with several members, told them that he was well satisfied with the accomplishments of the congressional session.

An hour after his arrival at the capitol the president had signed all the bills placed before him, including the public buildings bill, the general deficiency and the government employees liability bills.

Notice to Water Consumers.
The hours for using water for sprinkling and irrigation purposes are from 6 to 9 a. m., and from 6 to 9 p. m. Consumers not observing this order will be cut off from their water supply without notice. The hours to begin and stop the use of water are indicated by signal whistles from the pumping station.

Finding a Horseshoe.

There is a man who has a very poor idea of the horseshoe as a bringer of good luck.

"I found one in the road some time ago," he remarked. "As a matter of fact, another old gentleman found it also about the same time. We both wanted it, and there was a tussle for it."

"I got the shoe, a black eye, a torn finger from a rusty nail in the shoe and a summons for assault and battery."

"It wasn't a very good start, but I thought I'd give it a fair trial. Of course in pulling the shoe up above the front door I managed to smash my thumb and fall from the stepladder."

"Then I sat down and waited for the luck to begin. That shoe seemed to be endowed with the power to attract trouble in every form."

"Duns, bailiffs, the landlord, measles and poverty were rarely out of the house, and my faith was shaken."

"Then one day, when the rate collector was standing on the top step, that shoe came down with a crash"—
"Ah!" interrupted the sympathizer. "Luck at last!"

"Not a bit of it," sighed the unlucky one. "It missed him by a foot!"—London Answers.

The Way of Womankind.

Women are indefatigable in their analysis of conduct. A man accepts a white ray of light for what it is; a woman passes it through a prism and resolves it into its component rays. If I pass Mrs. A. in the street without saluting her she conjectures a dozen painful motives to account for my absentmindedness. If she passes me I conclude that she is shortsighted or absentminded.

If I say to my niece Molly that 2 and 2 make 4 she consents, but is unconvinced. But if I show her this little formula— $1\frac{1}{2} + \frac{1}{4} + 1\frac{3}{4} + \frac{1}{4} = 4$ —she is at once all alive with interest and sits down to work it out and proclaim in triumph that it is so. From a hard and dull statement of the fact it has become a problem and an intrigue, and here she is in her element.

"That is the way of womankind in all relations to life."—Comments of Bagshot."

The Wild Boar.

The wild boar is a most courageous animal. The element of luck counts for a great deal in pig sticking, as in most other forms of sport, and it often happens that the foremost sportsman who by dint of hard riding or thanks to the fastest horse has come up with the quarry is deprived of the coveted honor of "first spear" by a sudden "jink" or turn of the pig. The boar, in spite of his clumsy appearance, is not only possessed of a great turn of speed, but is extraordinarily active. He will turn and twist like a hare, putting every obstacle in the shape of bushes, rocks, water, etc., between himself and his pursuers, but all the time making for the nearest patch of jungle and safety. The pace after pig is faster than the best of runs with hounds, but is sooner over.—Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News.

Twenty-Four Years

We have passed the 24th milestone in our existence as a Bank in Wichita Falls. This Bank having been organized May 15, 1884.

Twenty-four years ago Wichita Falls was a frontier town with one railroad outlet via Ft. Worth. No farmers in the surrounding country, with practically no rural districts and surrounded by sheep and cattle ranches on all sides, and people looked upon the town as only a temporary stopping place.

The organizers of this Bank were among the first to foresee the future development of this country, and today Wichita Falls is a bustling City of 6,000 people, with railroad outlets in seven different directions, rapidly forging to the front as the commercial metropolis of this section.

During this time we have grown from a small beginning to a large and successful business.

We have endeavored to keep abreast of the times, providing for ourselves every modern appliance and up-to-date system to facilitate our office work, providing for our depositors every safe-guard known for their protection and security.

We have given freely to every deserving charity; contributed to every enterprise that would tend to improve or bring trade to our City.

We enjoy the confidence of the people of this community, and take this opportunity to thank our customers whose patronage has helped to make the last year the largest and best in our history.

WE ARE HERE TO STAY.

TELLS HOW TO BUILD AND USE THE SPLIT-LOG DRAG

One of the latest publications issued by the office of the Public Roads of the United States Department of Agriculture treats of the split-log drag, an implement which numerous experiments have conclusively shown to be the greatest possible boon to keep earth roads smooth and passable. Because of its simplicity, its efficiency and its cheapness, both in construction and operation, it is destined to come more and more into general use. With the drag properly built and its use well understood, the maintenance of earth roads becomes a simple and inexpensive matter.

At the present time there are approximately 2,000,000 miles of earth roads in the United States. Some of the most important of these roads will be improved with stone, gravel and other materials. Many others which are equally important cannot be so improved on account of lack of funds or suitable materials, while still others will not require such treatment because of the light traffic to which they are subjected. For these reasons the majority of our roads must be maintained as earth roads for many years to come. This must be done by inexpensive methods and the split-log drag will be a powerful aid if economy is the criterion demanded.

In the construction of this implement, care should be taken to make it so light that one man can lift it with ease, a light drag responding more readily to various methods of hitching than a heavy one, as well as to the shifting of the position of the operator. The best material for a split-log drag is a dry red cedar log, though red elm and walnut are excellent, and box elder, soft maple, or even willow are superior to oak, hickory or ash. The log should be between 7 and 10 feet long and from 10 to 12 inches in diameter at the butt end. It should be split carefully as near the center as possible, and the heaviest and best slab chosen for the front. In the front slab four inches from the end which is to drag in the middle of the road bore a 2-inch hole which is to receive a cross stake. At a distance of 22 inches from the other end of the front slab, locate the center for another cross stake. The hole for the middle stake will be on a line connecting and half way between the two. Then place the back slab in position and from the end which is to drag in the middle of the road measure 20 inches for the center of the opposite stake. The hole for the center of one cross stake and 4 inches from the other end locate the center of the opposite stake. The hole for the center stake should be located half way between the two. All these holes should be carefully bored perpendicular or at right angles to the face of the split log.

If these directions are followed it will be found that when the holes of the front and back slabs are brought opposite each other, one end of the back slab will be 16 inches nearer the center of the roadway than the front one. That gives what is known as "set-back." The stakes, which are 30 inches long, will hold the slabs this distance apart. When the stakes have been firmly wedged into their sockets, a brace about 2 inches thick and 4 inches wide may be placed diagonally to them at the ditch end of the drag. A cleated board is placed between the slabs and across the stakes for the driver to stand on.

By many it is deemed best to place a strip of iron along the lower face of the front slab for a cutting blade and to prevent the drag from wearing. The drag may be fastened to the double-tree by means of a trace chain. The chain should be wrapped around the left hand or rear stake and passed over the front slab. Raising the chain at this end of the slab permits the earth to drift past the face of the drag. The other end of the chain should be passed through a hole in the opposite end of the front slab and held by a pin passed through a link.

For ordinary purposes, the hitch should be so made that the unloaded drag will follow the team at an angle of about 45 degrees. The team should be driven with one horse on either side of the right wheel track or rut the full length of the portion to be dragged, and made to return in the same manner over the other half of the roadway. Such treatment will move the earth toward the center of the roadway and raise it gradually above the surrounding level.

The best results have been obtained by dragging roads once each way after each heavy rain. In some cases, however, one dragging every three or four weeks has been found sufficient to keep a road in good condition.

When the soil is moist, but not sticky, the drag does its best work. As the soil in a field will bake if plowed, so the road will bake if the drag is used on it when it is wet. If the roadway is full of holes or badly rutted, the drag should be used once when the ground is soft and slushy. This is particularly applicable before a cold spell in winter, when it is possible to so prepare the surface that it will freeze smooth.

Not infrequently conditions are met which may be overcome by a slight change in the manner of hitching. Shortening the chain tends to lift the front slab and make the cutting slight, while a longer hitch causes the front slab to sink more deeply into the earth and act on the principle of a plow.

If a furrow of earth is to be moved, the double-tree should be attached close to the ditch end of the drag, and the driver should stand with one foot on the extreme forward end of the front slab.

Conditions are so varied in different localities, however, that it is quite impossible to lay down specific rules. Certain sections of a roadway will require more attention than others, because of steep grades, wet weather springs, soil conditions, exposure to sun and wind, washes, etc. There is one condition, however, in which special attention should be given. Clay roads under persistent draggings frequently become too high in the center. This may be corrected by dragging the earth toward the center of the road twice and away from it once.

There is no question as to the economy of this road implement, either in first cost or in operation. In six counties in Kansas in 1906 the cost of maintaining ordinary earth roads, without the aid of the split-log drag, averaged $42.50 a mile. These figures were furnished by Prof. W. C. Hoad, of the University of Kansas, who secured them from official records of the counties.

Some figures furnished by F. P. Sanborn and R. H. Alshon, general manager of the Chicago and North-western railroad, have revealed the wonders of this simple device. Mr. Sanborn said "the least expense per mile per annum for split log dragging was $1.50, the greatest a little over $6.00 and the average expense per mile for 5 1/2 miles a little over $2.00. I have lived along this road all my life and never in forty years have I seen it freer from mud and dust, despite the fact that during the season we have experienced the extremes of weather conditions."

The testimony of Mr. Alshon is equally strong. Learning that a town-ship in Iowa had been making an investigation of the split-log drag and had been experimenting with it for a year on 28 miles of highway, he sent an agent to secure information. It was reported that although the town board had paid the cost of making the drags and of hiring men to operate them, the total expense for the one year averaged but $2.40 a mile, and the roads were reported to have been "like a race track" the greater portion of the year.

A BAD PLAN OF TRAVEL.

The Scheme That Worried One Woman on Her Trip Abroad.

"When I hear of people joyfully making plans for their first trip abroad," said a man who has made many a transatlantic voyage, "I am tempted to give them a little bit of advice, based, of course, on my own observations, but particularly upon a remark made to me by a middle aged woman whose seat in the saloon was next to mine on my return trip last summer. This woman had a husband, and it was to him that she referred in answering my question one day. I asked her what she had been doing on the other side. She looked half quizzically, half reproachfully, at her spouse and said, 'Well, my principal occupation was trying to keep track of John.'

It developed that her concern was not over what John might do in European capitals, but simply related to the difficulty each had in meeting the other, after pursuing their several ways in a strange city, she to browse among the shops and he, an inveterate sightseer, to visit this, that and the other spot of interest. Their general scheme, as I was informed, was to diverge, say, in the morning, following their respective bents and arranging to meet at a certain place at a certain time. The plan sounds feasible, but it is experimental, and, as both of them found, it was an experiment that didn't work well. First one would be delayed and then the other, and if you have ever waited for a person in a foreign city you can appreciate the particular variety of anxiety that comes in about ten minutes. There's a feeling that something has happened to the missing person, for one thing, and, for another, there's an increasing realization that you yourself are wasting time. If you start out to look up the delinquent, the case becomes practically hopeless. The needle in the haystack is easy compared to that search. When the reunion does come at dinner time in the hotel or pension, explanations are received with tears or haughty disdain. Oh, I know, I've been through it."—New York Press.

A Kaleidoscope of Fashions.

For my part I commend a quick changing fashion and could I have chosen my period would have fixed on the fickle years of the first empire, when fashions shifted from week to week, and that, too, with such fine shades of difference that only the most frivolous could follow them. Then the great conqueror brought to Paris finery from the ends of the earth, muslins from India, garlands of roses from Bengal, stuffs shining with gold and silver from Calcutta; from Turkey, of course, turbans, and from the far east shawls—shawls from Kashmir, from Persia and from the Levant; shawls particolored, blue—bright blue—and red and green and black and the clear yellow of the sun; shawls patterned with all the interlacings of Asian caprice and fit not only to hang from the shoulders of the fair, but to give a coquette of eastern fancy day long visions of the orient. From the past, for all time as well as all the earth was then Napoleon's, came the fashion of the troubadours—chapeaux a Creneau, sleeves a la mameluk, cheuveux a l'enfant, lending to a very modern period who can say what charming Gothic airs? How do not such revolutions of fashion enlarge the feminine heart and teach it to live in all ages and all climates!—Lucy M. Donnelly in Atlantic.

BYRYN'S STROKE FOR PUBLICITY.

Houston Post.
In his advocacy of the great underlying truths of democracy Mr. Bryan by his irresistible eloquence and sincerity of conviction has so impressed upon the American people the necessity for their application to public affairs that a reaction in favor of a return to constitutional government has apparently set in so strongly as to threaten the proportions of a tidal wave before the close of the present campaign.

Steadily, but surely, he has been driving these truths into the minds and consciences of the people, until farseeing leaders of the party that has done so much during recent years to lead them off into dangerous and forbidden paths have become alarmed for the welfare of their own organization and by personal example have sought to influence it in favor of reforms imperatively demanded, by becoming champions, in a modified way, of some of the policies so strongly advocated by this great democratic leader and tribune of the people.

Having observed the growing evils resulting from the corrupt use of money in elections, Mr. Bryan long ago became alarmed for the safety of popular government if some checks were not put to the practice of amassing large campaign funds for the purpose of debauching public suffrages, and in his public speeches throughout the country has made emphatic protest against the evil, and advocated as a remedy the enactment of a law regarding the publication of all campaign contributions, thus insuring such publicity as would place the voters of the country on their guard against those who would rob them of pure elections.

To this end, seeing that the present republican congress was about to adjourn the session without enacting public legislation, Mr. Bryan by a shrewd tactical move that must inevitably force action in the matter by the majority, or else place the republican party in a most indefensible position before the country, addressed a letter to Secretary Taft, in which he used the following language, thus emphasizing, as it were, the standing challenge of the minority guaranteeing the quick passage of a law if thirty republicans would assist: "I beg to suggest that as leading candidates in our respective parties we join in asking congress to pass a bill requiring publication of campaign contributions prior to election. If you think best we can ask other candidates to unite with us in the request."

Realizing that he was fairly cornered, Mr. Taft replied by making public a letter, marked personal, written by him on April 30 to Senator Burrows, chairman of the committee on privileges and elections of the senate, in which he announced his sympathy with the senate bill on that subject, adding the further assurance to Mr. Bryan that he had since said publicly that he "hoped such a bill would pass."

Rather a timid response, but as every little helps, further results will be awaited with more or less anxiety, though it is unlikely that the bill which passed the house containing a provision looking to the reduction of Southern representation in congress, a policy that the Galveston-Dallas News once so strongly advocated, will be allowed to become a law.

Thus by his loyalty to the interests of the masses upon every occasion, Mr. Bryan has forced upon both President Roosevelt and the one whom he has chosen to succeed himself, the necessity for appealing to congress for the enactment of legislation for which both Mr. Bryan and the democratic party have long contended.

The Supreme Court of the United States has affirmed the decision of the United States Circuit Court in the case of H. Clay Pierce, who is under indictment for perjury in Travis county. This means that Mr. Pierce will now have to come to Texas and stand trial. The last legislature, anticipating such a decision by the Supreme court, perhaps, had the law changed so as to allow persons convicted of a felony to be released on bond, pending the final disposition of the charges, and even if Mr. Pierce should be convicted he will not be forced to go to jail.

J. M. Pressler of Comanche, recently appointed to the court of civil appeals, has decided to make the race for congress against Congressman Gillespie. In making his announcement, he says: "My candidacy for congress will take no time which belongs to the public, as I shall not undertake to canvass the district until the court adjourns for the term, July 1st."

PETITION TO COME BEFORE COMMITTEE.

would he say if San Antonio has any serious rival for the honor.

Prohibition Matter.

As to matters which will be before the committee he said that he is officially informed by the leaders of the democratic submission movement that the petitions properly signed for the submission of the Constitutional amendment matter will be brought up. Unofficially it is stated that the anti-prohibitionists will also have a presentation and petitions, and it is likely, so the official statement runs, that the local optionists will have a third matter to place before the committee. The latter petitions seek, it is stated, to have the matter of prohibition settled at the July primaries making it unnecessary to delay the matter for legislative action and a later vote of the people in election. Two of the petitioning parties seek to have the one vote to be the arbiter of the matter.

Bass Weighed Over Five Pounds.

Dr. L. C. Tyson exhibited a fine bass on the streets this morning, which weighed a little better than five pounds. The fish was brought in to the doctor by the man who lives on his farm where the dam was washed away a week ago Friday night. Some water was left in the lake and the heavy rain last night washed out the big bass into a pool below the dam, where it was found and captured this morning. The big fish is about all that Dr. Tyson recovered from the ruins of his splendid lake.

THOUSANDS OF MEN GO BACK TO WORK.

The executive committee of the association has taken up the plan with railroads and other corporations out of St. Louis and many have agreed to try it. The number of men to be re-employed outside of St. Louis has not been learned.

An inquiry into the local business conditions during the month of May (since the founding of the organization), was finished yesterday. The answers to the questions put by the association indicate a remarkable increase in business and a rapid recovery from the recent money stringency.

The questions were: "Is the country regaining confidence? Is the number of employes increasing? What do you hear from farmers and other towns?"

Manufacturers of this country will find in their mail tomorrow orders aggregating over $1,000,000 from a single St. Louis house. Simmons Hardware Company sent the orders with a note saying that the orders are to give the manufacturers a basis for re-employing their idle men.

THE HIPPOCRATIAN OATH.

What Every Conscientious Physician Undertakes to Do.

"First and last, day and night, he who has given himself to the cause of medicine sees the most sordid, the most terrifying, the most pitiful, side of humanity," says a writer in Appleton's Magazine. "His training is in the slums, where the elements of life may touch even the lowest and basest. His service is demanded in sickness and pain, and his final act, as irrevocably as the rising of the sun, is to close the eyes forever of others, even perhaps those whom he brought into the world. He is the possessor of secrets, the repository of sorrow.

"Into whatever house I enter I will go for the benefit of the sick. With purity and holiness I will pass my life and practice my art." So ran the oath administered by Hippocrates to his students almost five centuries before Christ, and so still stands today the physician's ideal. Medicine then partook of a character of holiness, for the student, too, swore to reckon him who taught me this art equally dear to me as my parents; to look upon his offspring in the same footing as my own brothers and to teach them this art if they shall wish it without fee or stipulation.

"Can any one today with an inkling of the life of the disciple of medicine doubt that the spirit of this ancient oath is rigidly observed in its practice, or that, as Hippocrates dictated 2,500 years ago, 'Whatever in connection with my professional practice or not in connection with it I see or hear in the life of men which ought not to be spoken abroad I will not divulge, as reckoning all that should be kept secret?'"

BUENOS AIRES.

An Orderly City in Which Affairs Are Well Conducted.

Things are done well in the City of Good Airs. There are good things to eat, comfortable rooms to live in, places where a man can get his exercise and outdoor sport. After the tropics the gringo feels like a man who has been hopping from foothold to foothold in a swamp and steps at last on solid ground. The creature comforts of a capable, wide awake, well-arranged city soothingly envelop him. The cohero knows where he wants to go, the waiter knows what he wants to eat. The mounted policeman, in breastplate and horsehair helmet, rides him back with the rest of the crowd and does it so quietly and with such sophisticated nonchalance that he promptly conceives a passionate admiration for that policeman and his beautiful horse, falls into the communal pride common to all city dwellers and is ready to declare that there is no other policeman so fine in the world. The streets are clean and well kept, and the buildings which line them, however gingerbreadly their architecture, are held within decorous maximum and minimum limits of height. Everything is near at hand. The hotel, club, bank, drive, the restaurants and theaters are all within, so to say, feeling distance. And this physical compactness and neatness, this continental glitter and activity, set here oasis-like, combine to give the whole a certain dimisutiveness and cosy intimacy. There's a "little old Buenos Aires," too.—Arthur Ruhl in Scribner's Magazine.

If a man wishes to marry a woman forty years old, should he ask her father for her?—Atchison Globe.

THE LAND OF GRAVES.

Ancient Egyptians Believed in Constant Reminders of Death.

To the Egyptian death was but the beginning of a career of adventures and experiences compared with which the most vivid emotions of this life were tame. He lived with the fear of death before his eyes. Everything around him reminded him of that dreadful inflation into the mysteries of the tremendous after life for which his present existence was but a preparation. His cemeteries were not hidden away in remote suburbs; his dead were not covered with mere grassy mounds or a slab of stone. The whole land was his graveyard; its whole art was of the mortuary. "Are there no graves in Egypt that thou hast brought us into the wilderness to die?" asked the Israelites in derision, and we may believe that Moses winced at the sarcasm.

Egypt is the land of graves, and the whole energy of the people that could be spared from keeping life together was devoted to death. The mightiest tombs in the world—the pyramids—were raised upon the deaths of multitudes of toiling slaves. The hills were honeycombed passages and galleries, chambers, pits, all painfully excavated in honor of the illustrious dead, and sculptured and painted with elaborate skill to make them fit habitations for his ghost.

Wherever he looked the Egyptian beheld preparations for the great turning point of existence. The mason was squaring blocks for the tomb chamber; the potter molded images of the gods or bowls and jars to be placed in the grave for the protection or refreshment of the Ka, exhausted with the ordeals of the underworld; the sculptor and painter were at work upon the walls of the funeral chamber, illustrating the scenes through which the ghost was to pass or depicting the industrious life of the departed.

The very temples which cluster along the levels beside the Nile were in a sense but vestibules to the tombs in the hills behind. The sacred lake, now the weedy, picturesque haunt of water fowl, was then the scene of solemn ferryings of the dead. The temple walls were covered with the terrors of the judgment to come. The houses of the living, indeed, were built of perishing mud, but the bones of the dead and the shrines where supplication was made to the gods who ruled their fate were made to last forever. On these all the strength, the science and the artistic skill of the ancient Egyptians were cheerfully lavished.—London Saturday Review.

A Preserve Owner's Sisk Trout.

A man whose experience as a sportsman had been limited to an occasional day's fishing in the mountains bought for himself a place with a fine trout preserve on Long Island. He looked forward with great interest to the last opening day, as that would be his first opportunity to fish in his own pond, and when the day at last arrived the first streak of daylight found him leaving his house, rod in hand.

A day or two later a sportsman friend inquired as to what luck he had had. "I caught plenty of fish, and big ones, too," responded the owner of the preserve. "There are plenty of trout in the pond, but they all seem to be sick."

"Why, what's the matter with them?" asked the sportsman.

"Well," answered the preserve owner, "to tell the truth, we were afraid to eat them. Their flesh is pink, and I never saw a brook trout that color before."

"Don't you know, man," exclaimed the sportsman, with a laugh, "that any trout will turn pink if it lives in salt water? Your pond empties into the sound, and of course the trout run in and out. The next time you have any of that sort of sick trout just send them in to me, and I'll eat them for you with pleasure."—New York Times

WORKING WITH GLASS

The Way the Different Color Effects Are Produced.

FREAKS OF THE BLOWPIPE.

Quaint Specimen Shapes That Are Sometimes Dropped From the Puntill. How Bottles Are Made by the Clever and Dexterous Workmen.

If a stranger enters the glass works on a dark night he will find not only beauty in the blowing operations, but a great deal of humor, with an unceasing weldiness to flame and shadow that must affect his imagination to some extent. The building is circular, with a chimney sticking up through the middle of it, from the top of which a peculiar intermittent light is flickering. In the center of this building, underneath the chimney, stands a crucible furnace of brick containing perhaps a few dozen glowing holes which are fiercely glaring suns and from which pour expanding broad rays of orange-colored light. If your eyes are strong enough to look through the holes from which the orange beams of light emerge, you see several hundred feet of molten metal shining silvery green, in as many earthen dome shaped melting pots.

The nature of different kinds of glass is dependent upon the quality of the raw material, called "batch," put into the melting pots. "Batch" is a mixture of such materials as Calais sand, or common river sand abounding in silica, salt cake, or sodium carbonate and much lime. Blue colors may be obtained by adding oxide of cobalt, green by means of a chrome, black by manganese and amber. The mass of molten metal got from this opaque, earthy looking "batch" has frequently to be skimmed of impurities, but it is nevertheless a problem whence comes that wonderful and enduring transparency which everybody likes to see in glass.

Until the hour strikes for the workmen to commence operations you may find them experimenting for amusement or profit with the blowpipe. You will see many an enormity produced in glass, the like of which can scarcely ever have been dropped from a puntill before. Specimens are blown out to the thickness of a tissue paper bag, which another puff of wind explodes with a crack, or a glowing glass pear is for very wantonness knocked off the puntill so that it may vanish with a report on the floor, its hue and heat being extinguished immediately. The floor all around the furnace chamber is covered with brittle shining splinters and particles of glass, which crackle under foot at every step. One of the men may bring you a mass of metal on a blowpipe and ask you to expend a few chequers of wind upon it. The pipe takes no more blowing than a trombone, though it lacks a mouthpiece and you may expand the bubble until it is black and cold, so fragile that it will break into a myriad pieces if you touch it. The molten glass is so ductile that it may be spun out into a thread, and the men often vie with each other to see who can make the longest and thinnest strand.

At the signal to commence work the men, already partly stripped to the waist, poke their four foot blowpipe through the hole of the crucible opposite to which they work, twisting it round until it has taken up sufficient of the rosy and viscid glass for one bottle. The man who is clever at his work will, of course, gather up neither too much nor too little for the thickness of the bottle required. He can tell without looking through the furnace holes when he has enough by the weight added to his pipe. Thus all around the fiery furnace there are figures moving continually across the lurid light, most of them dexterously welding their blowpipes and balancing at the end of each one the exact quantity of molten matter to make a bottle. The amateur would find it difficult to balance the molten mass. The chances are that it would drop on the floor, never to be picked up again.

At the same moment you will see bottles in all stages of growth—some glittering gold, others cooling down to orange or red, some in the forms of plumpets or dazzling pears, others as incandescent bosses threatening to become fragile bladders. It is all as charming as a pyrotechnic display. You will see the black blowpipe twisted round, blown down, held up like a gun barrel, then in the form of an incandescent lamp globe turned round on a becwaxed cast iron implement called a marler, on whose edge the bottle neck is formed. It is held up, once more, blown into, then shut up in a cast iron mold placed at the operator's feet somewhat below the level of the ground. This mold is opened and closed by a wire spring, which the operator presses with his feet, and directly the red hot bottle is inclosed he blows down the pipe once more so as to fill it completely.

A man goes round from mold to mold inserting a rod into the neck of each bottle and collecting a trayful to go to the annealing chamber. Here the bottles are stacked up for a gradual cooling process, which may possibly last thirty-six hours. This gives them the desired strength. The annealing process is a cure for their natural fragility and enables them to stand the test of boiling water.—London Globe.

Still Possible.

TWO HAVE NARROW ESCAPE IN RUNAWAY

Frank Krajca, Sr., a well known farmer living four miles north of town, and John Williams sustained slight injuries this morning when Mr. Krajca's horse ran away. Mr. Krajca was watering his horse at the tank on Ohio avenue in front of the pool hall and had removed the bridle to allow it to drink. The animal suddenly took a fancy to run and made a dash for the corner. Mr. Williams was in the buggy and had no opportunity to jump out before the buggy was caught between two telephone poles standing at either side of the pavement crossing.

Mr. Krajca, who had thrown his arms about the horse's neck in a desperate effort to stop it, was thrown into the gutter against the cement curb, while Mr. Williams went head first over the dashboard onto the pavement.

When the buggy struck the telephone poles the horse was freed from the shafts and made a bee line for the door of Hogan & Stone's real estate office across the street, but was caught just before it reached the pavement.

Mr. Krajca was severely bruised and sustained some sprains, but escaped without the dislocation of any bones or fractures. Mr. Williams got off with some slight bruises and cuts of no consequence.

A TELEPHONE GIRL

"YOUNG MAN, TAKE MY ADVICE AND MARRY A TELEPHONE GIRL" SAYS THE SUPT.

LET'S OTHERS DO TALKING

Telephone Official Explains Why the Training "Central" Gets Fits Her to Practice Patience.

New York Sun. "Young man," said the telephone superintendent, "take my advice and marry a telephone girl if you have simply got to marry some one."

"Why? Well, there are all sorts of reasons. But in the first place, as well as secondly, thirdly and fourthly, she will have a good disposition. When you come home late for dinner or leave your pipe in the parlor or commit some other deadly sin she may do a lot of thinking, but she won't say much, and you will have the laugh on all the other husbands of girls who are not properly trained."

"You see, a telephone girl learns first and foremost to let other persons do the talking. If she didn't she company would lose most of its subscribers inside of a month. She sits for hours at a time in front of a board covered with lights and switches and plugs and administers constantly to the wants of a lot of folks who are absolutely itching for trouble."

"Did you ever hear a woman, for instance, get busy at the phone? First she calls a number, usually in a voice that defies any combination of electricity and wires to transmit. Sometimes she gives the right number. Not always. It proves to be busy."

"Call me, Central," says the lady at the phone. Then she goes away, sits down in a chair and fusses. In a minute she is back at the wire again. "That number still busy," she asks. "She doesn't say what number, Central has been working both hands and everything inside of her head meantime, but the lady doesn't care. Central ought to have remembered the number."

"What number?" she snorts. "What number? Why, I told you the number not a minute ago! And as a matter of fact she has forgotten herself. However, she finds it again and is again informed that it is busy."

"Well, hurry them up," she says. "Just like that. What do you suppose would happen to Central if she hurried them up? But Central says she will do her best."

"Wretched service," remarks the lady as she sits down. In a minute more she is up again. "Central," she fusses, "can't you get me that number? I've been for the last half hour trying to get it. Yes, of course, that's the number. So busy talking to the girl next to her that she doesn't pay any attention. I know perfectly well that there is no reason on earth why I can't have that number. It's just pure perversity. What's that? Busy? Oh, that's perfect nonsense. You told me that before. It is? Well, you give me the manager."

"Central does not answer her back, which spoils half the fun, and almost before she knows it, she is connected with the manager, who is put there to meet just such complaints. He investigates and finds that the number is still busy. He tells the lady a smuch."

"She believes the manager, but still blames Central for not giving her the number in the first place. She is sure the wire was not busy when she first called."

"Well, young man, Central has to sit and take that for hours at a time and say nothing but 'Busy. I'll call you,' and once in a while gets to switch off on a few numbers."

"It's hard training them. More girls fall to make Centrals than there are that succeed. It simply isn't in the nature of the sex, for that matter, to sit and take it from all sides and say nothing in return. But they learn, and when they have mastered it they never forget."

"So if you've got to marry, pick out a telephone girl from preference."

A SCHOOL TEACHER SHOT DOWN.

Had His Baby Girl in His Arms When Killed.

Paris, Tex., May 30.—J. G. Jacoway, for several years principal of the Graham street Grammar School, was shot and instantly killed this morning in the front yard of Mr. Campbell's residence, opposite the school house, where he was visiting, his boarding house being a few blocks away on another street. Robert J. Long was arrested and a complaint was sworn to charging him with murder. His examining trial will be held next week. Justice Boyett held an inquest and returned a verdict of death by pistol wounds from a weapon in the hands of R. J. Long. Five bullets took effect, three in the breast.

Prof. Jacoway had gone to the school building and took along his baby girl, little more than a year old, leaving her at Mr. Campbell's while he was in the school building. Returning, he took her in his arms and was leaving, when he was met by Long, who lives only a few houses away, and was carrying a milk pitcher, having come to Mr. Campbell's, it is stated, for milk. The shooting followed immediately. The child was unhurt, but her dress was stained with blood.

No statement has been made as to the cause of the trouble. Long is unmarried and lives with his father and sister. Prof. Jacoway leaves a wife and one child.

This Makes It Very Plain. The meaning of the word "swastika" is "It is well," or good luck. The meaning of the symbol is more complex. Some folks trace it to the sun. "The emblem is the sun in motion," argued Professor Max Muller. "A wheel with spokes was actually replaced by what we now call swastika. The swastika is, in fact, an abbreviated emblem of the solar wheel with spokes in it, the tire and the movement being indicated by the crampus. "It is the summary in a few lines, of the whole work of creation," said Mme. Blavatsky; "is evolution, as one should say, from cosmogony down to anthropology, from the indivisible unknown to materialistic science, whose genesis is as unknown to that science as that of the all Deity itself. The swastika is found heading the religious symbols of every old nation."

The Defect in His Dressing. The professor of surgery in one of England's universities has the reputation of being one of the most painstaking and delicate operators in Britain, thoughtful of the patient and careful in the clinic. One day in the course of a clinical demonstration he turned to a student who had just commenced his studies with the question: "Now, sir, can you tell me what is wrong with my dressing?" The ingenious youth turned red and preserved a discreet silence. The professor, however, was not to be put off and repeated the question. After a long pause the youth stammered out in a fit of desperation: "Well, sir, if you insist on my telling you, I should say your tie is not quite straight."—London Globe.

The Son's Answer. After his son's great success with the "Dame aux Camellias" Alexandre Dumas wrote to him as though a stranger, congratulating him on the book and expressing a desire to make the author's acquaintance. "I myself am a literary man," said he in conclusion, "and you may have heard my name as the author of 'Monte Cristo.'" Dumas' fil was equal to the occasion. He wrote immediately in reply, expressing the great pleasure he would have in making his correspondent's acquaintance, principally on account of the high terms in which he had always heard his father speak of the author of "Monte Cristo."

Deeply Affecting. "And when," said Mrs. Nuvorech, "those French peasants came by singing the Mayonnaise it was too deeply touching for words."—Success Magazine.

Great souls are not those who have fewer passions and more virtues than the common, but those only who have greater designs.—La Rochefoucauld.

OUR SAILORS' UNIFORMS.

Copied From England and Not Representative of America.

All are familiar with the American man-of-war sailor's suit, but has any one ever stopped to consider how he comes by it and what the origin of it is? With the exception of the fit itself and the stars in the corner of the collar the whole suit is copied from the English. One would have thought that by this time the American nation would have fallen upon some original costume for its navy in some way more representative of America.

In the early days of the British navy it was still the custom to tie the hair in a cue after well greasing it, but much annoyance was felt by the men in consequence of the oil getting on the rough serge of their jumpers or blouses. This caused the blue collar of the same material as the jumper to be added, but without much success, as the collar looked quite as untidy, so at length the idea of putting the blue drill one over the serge was adopted, the drill collar being a separate appendage and therefore easily washed and kept clean. The lanyard was worn to represent the ropes and rigging of the ship, and the jackknife indicated that (to be paradoxical) the bluejacket's object in life was death to his enemy.

In those days the neck was exposed, but as time went on and more thought was given to the welfare of the men this was found to be injurious to the health; hence the substitute of the white neck flannel, white being used to give the effect of the uncovered neck.

The two rows of white braid at the top of the cuff represent England and Ireland, the one row at the bottom showing that Scotland had not become annexed. The rows of braid on the collar represent wholly and solely the victories of Nelson.

At the opening of Lord Nelson's grand career and his first great victory at Aboukir the first row of braid was put on the collar, and Jack was a proud and happy man, and he became still prouder and happier when Aboukir was followed by Nelson's greater victory at Copenhagen, and the second row was added. But he became the proudest and happiest man and, alas, also the most sorrowful and grief stricken, when that great hero and magnificent example of naval courage lost his life in his last victory at Trafalgar, and so the third row of braid went on, but there was no more to come after it, for "the last pipe" had sounded for the gallant sailor, his last fight fought, his last victory won. To signify the mourning which filled the hearts of all English sailors the black scarf was added. This was the origin of the British tar's uniform, which is both historical and biographical and dear to the heart of all English people.—New York World.

Chaffs the Confederate.
Springfield Republican.

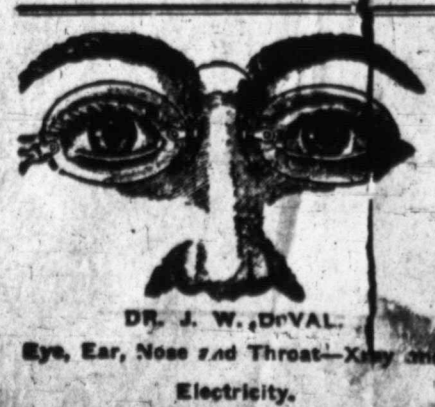

There recently died in Kansas City, Mo., Major General Orestes P. Craffee, once a conspicuous soldier of Southern Confederacy and an elder brother of Lieutenant General Adna R. Chaffee, retired Chief of Staff of the United States army. His had been a career of vicissitudes. Born in Ohio, he moved in childhood to Montgomery, Ala., and when the Civil war broke out he was a rich planter.

He threw himself into the Southern cause with great ardor, and had part in some thirty of the bloodiest battles of the war. In the battle of Lookout Mountain he fought on the Confederate side. Towards the close of the war he fell to the lot of General Chaffee to serve his army in the matter of securing supplies. This meant foraging in the enemy's country, and so many seizures as contraband were made that he was one of the list of six who were not to extend amnesty in the future, and to save his life he fled in disguise to Chicago.

There for eighteen years, from friends and with health by the war, the former soldier employed himself in the rubber industry at Para. Finally in 1892, such the efforts of personal friends including Generals Joe Wheeler, Longstreet and Bragg, he was restored to citizenship and allowed to return to the United States.

He was a man of attractive personality and fine education, and his intimate knowledge of the Spanish language stood him in good stead. It enabled him to make a livelihood with commercial enterprises, and in the service of the government. General Leonard Wood found him a valuable assistant in 1900 in helping to shape affairs in Cuba. General Chaffee left Cuba in 1902, and had since been a part of the time in government employ, most recently in New Orleans. Through this General Chaffee remained to the last one of the few reconstructed Confederates, he could not be brought into any discussion of the Civil war times, which he dismissed as "all past."

PLANS FOR THE REUNION OF U. C. V.

Special to the Times.
Birmingham, Ala., June 1.—The annual reunion of the United Confederate Veterans will be held in Birmingham June 9, 10 and 11. After months of hard work Birmingham is ready to welcome the thousands from all parts of the nation who have already signified their intention of being present. When the hotels are filled private homes will be thrown open and every visitor will be taken care of, so that the 25-year-old city so representative of the new south will try to outdo its older sister cities in doing honor to the men who were the defenders of all that was best in the old south.

A feature of the Birmingham reunion will be the attention given the veterans themselves. Sponsors, maids, sons and daughters will be given secondary consideration, and an effort will be made to take care of each veteran individually. Advanced age and infirm step will be no handicap to the visitors in having a pleasant time if the plans of the local committees go through. In the first place, Birmingham will entertain free every veteran who will accept this hospitality, and to this end a modern hotel has been fitted-up at the state fair grounds known as the "Hotel John B. Gordon," where everything will be free. Bands will be there day and night to play the tunes that the old men love so well, and prominent local sons of veterans and others will be on hand to see that every man enjoys himself in his own way.

Seven bands have already been engaged to play on the streets, and in addition to this, there will be numerous free concerts and shows during the three days of the reunion. The local committee is spending more money for music than has ever been spent before at a reunion for this feature.

Weeks ago the commanding officers of the various divisions of the veterans engaged their quarters, sponsors and maids have been named and provision made for their entertainment, and it is believed that everything will move like clockwork when the reunion begins.

General George P. Harrison, commander of the Alabama division, will be chief marshal of the parade, which will take place at 11 o'clock on the morning of Thursday. The route will not be long, because everything is being done with consideration for the advancing years of the veterans. The reviewing stand will be at Capital Park and the line of march will be down Twentieth street.

The parade will go for six blocks on this broad thoroughfare, which will be more elaborately decorated than anything ever before attempted by Birmingham.

A uniform plan will be carried out the full length of the street in harmony with decoration about the Confederate monument and reviewing stand at Capital Park. On each side of the street facades will be erected, and these will be connected at frequent intervals by arches extending entirely across the street. At Capital Park the facades will be merged into the court of honor scheme, which will surround the monument and reviewing stand. Thousands of yards of bunting and thousands of flags will be used in carrying out this design.

The official program has been issued for the reunion, and it provides for the opening of the Hippodrome at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning. At 10 o'clock General Harrison will call the convention to order, and invocation will be made by Rev. Dr. J. William Jones of Richmond, Va., chaplain-general. Following this General Harrison will deliver his opening address. Gov. B. B. Comer of Alabama will welcome the visitors on behalf of the State.
