

GOT GREAT OVATION

NEW YORKERS GIVE AN ELEVEN MINUTE DEMONSTRATION AT SIGHT OF BRYAN.

CRITICISES ROOSEVELT

Democratic Nominee Spoke to Great Crowd in Carnegie Hall—Introduced by Ridder.

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch gives the following graphic account of the big meeting addressed by Bryan in Carnegie Hall in New York city Saturday night:

William Jennings Bryan had a "perfectly corking time" among the conquered democratic enemies in Carnegie Hall last night. Standing before 2,200 of them packed in the parquet, lobby and galleries, he received an ovation which could not have been more enthusiastic if he had saved the Giants from defeat at the hands of the Pittsburgh Pirates, or had won a world's Marathon race.

In the most pretentious speech of the campaign he sounded the first note of personal criticism of President Roosevelt; compared and contrasted the platforms of the two parties, and analyzed with the keen insight of a master the differences with illuminating clearness.

With strong and measured voice, speaking slowly and incisively, he outlined the issues of the campaign as he views them and made a plea for support so sincere and earnest that the vast audience was moved to applaud heartily every period of his address.

The reception accorded the Nebraskan was in striking contrast with his last appearance on the same stage, just eight years ago to a day, as a presidential candidate. Then he faced a divided party, still skeptical, unconvinced of the doctrines he had enunciated and established as party principles four years before. That audience viewed him then as something in the nature of an interesting personality, but without serious purpose.

Cheers for Eleven Minutes. The audience that he faced last night seemed to have been completely converted, not only to the influence of his personality, now more dominant, more fully rounded and eloquent in finished polish, but manifesting by keen appreciation a confidence in the doctrines that they had once repudiated.

From the moment Mr. Bryan entered the hall and stood at the rim of the stage during a vibrant 11 minutes of cheering until he ceased speaking at the end of 95 minutes he was cheered and cheered again by the occupants of the densely packed flat-girt gallery.

Back of him on the vast stage upon which was a giant lithograph of himself and Mr. Kern, were banked democrats of every persuasion and faction, some of whom had openly booted the democratic party in 1896 and 1900, when he was its candidate, and some of whom had always remained loyal to the faith.

These men united with the crowd in front in making Mr. Bryan feel very much at home. He was heralded by them as the "Peerless Leader," "the greatest orator of the United States," and the handclaps were as spontaneous and sincere as those that came from the galleries.

Scores of Leaders There. Occupying the boxes were 14 national committeemen, 42 State committeemen, 35 Tammany Hall district leaders and 18 of the McCarren leaders from Brooklyn.

The audience was not such a one as you ordinarily see at Tammany gatherings. The boxes were filled with women in evening costume and some of the men in the auditorium and on the stage wore evening clothes.

During the hour before Mr. Bryan arrived Secretary Tom Smith of Tammany Hall, called the meeting to order, laying particular stress upon the fact that it was given under the auspices of the "regular democratic organization, Tammany Hall." He then presented as the presiding officer Editor Herman Ridder.

When the shining bald dome of Mr. Bryan's head appeared at the top of the steps leading to the stage and stood out in full view of the audience he found every man and woman in the hall roaring a welcome that brought a genuine flush of pleasure to his cheeks. He stood for an instant poised on his toes, looking over the heads of some men in front of him and involuntarily raised his right hand, as is a habit with him when he first confronts an audience.

Mr. Bryan made his way to the front row of seats and remained for an even 11 minutes, during which the crowd on the floor and in the boxes and galleries roared his name and hurled a multitude of incoherent cries at him, but all of a laudatory and affectionate character.

When the applause had finally died out, Mr. Bryan was introduced by Mr. Ridder in this way:

"I have the honor to introduce to you a great American, Mr. Bryan."

Coming to the front of the stage Mr. Bryan took his station between the flag-draped reading desk and the presiding officer's table. With a hand on each he stood while the band played "America" and the audience broke forth into another noisy demonstration that continued for two or three minutes before he raised his right hand and waved it flutteringly at the audience to command attention.

Instantly there was silence and Mr. Bryan, spreading wide his two arms and smiling amiably, began his speech.

ASKS FOR SHOWDOWN

BRYAN DEMANDS PROOF FROM ROOSEVELT OF CHARGES AGAINST HASKELL.

THE GREAT FIGHT IS ON

Roosevelt Takes Final Thrust at Foraker—Taft Meets Negro Baptists.

By Associated Press. Detroit, Mich., Sept. 22.—Wm. J. Bryan late this afternoon addressed a telegram to President Roosevelt in reply to the president's statement issued yesterday in regard to Governor Haskell's connection with the Standard Oil Company, in which he demands proofs from the president and if the latter has none, requests that the president indicate the method by which the truth may be ascertained. Bryan agrees with the president that if Haskell is guilty he is unfit to be connected with the democratic national committee in any capacity.

League of Republican Clubs.

By Associated Press. Cincinnati, Ohio, Sept. 22.—Additional delegations arrived early today, and the formal opening of the biennial convention of the National Republican League today found a goodly crowd of enthusiastic members in Music Hall when the president, John Hays Hammond, called the league to order. The opening session was formal and routine business, including welcoming addresses, the responses and the transaction of general business, was disposed of.

Foraker Made No Statement.

By Associated Press. Cincinnati, Ohio, Sept. 22.—No answer to the statement issued by President Roosevelt will be made today by Senator Foraker, although he may have something to say tonight or later in the week. The senator said today that he had read what the president had said, but that it was a matter which he did not care to discuss off-hand and preferred to wait until he could look up various letters and other data on the subjects discussed, in order that what he might say would be final.

Mack Denies Roosevelt's Statement.

By Associated Press. New York, Sept. 22.—Chairman Mack of the democratic national committee, addressed a telegram to President Roosevelt today, flatly denying the statement of the reported interview between Timothy Woodruff and President Roosevelt, in which the latter stated that it seemed significant that three hundred thousand dollars were found in the treasury of the democratic national committee after it had been announced by Judge Parker that the treasury was empty.

Taft Meets With Negro Baptists.

By Associated Press. Cincinnati, Ohio, Sept. 22.—Judge Taft's appointments today include a meeting with the Colored National Baptist convention delegates, an address at the rally of the National League of Republican Clubs tonight. Taft's special train came in from Chicago this morning. The private car "Constitution" has been provided for Taft. The start will be made from here tomorrow morning at 8 o'clock.

Roosevelt Jumps on Foraker.

Special to the Times. Oyster Bay, N. Y., Sept. 21.—Late today Secretary Loeb gave to representatives of the press a formal statement by the president, which was called forth by the recent exchanges between Wm. Hearst and Senator Foraker of Ohio. Mr. Hearst in public utterance had accused the senator of relations with the Standard Oil Company inconsistent with his duties as a senator and his attitude as a representative of republican policies and professions. In today's statements President Roosevelt makes another appeal for the support of Taft and declares that his defeat would bring "lasting satisfaction to but one set of men—namely, to those men who, as shown in the correspondence published by Mr. Hearst, were besides Mr. Foraker, the opponent of Mr. Taft, within his own party and who are now behind Governor Haskell and his associates, the opponents of Mr. Taft in the opposite party."

Brownsville Affair is Mentioned. The statement embodies a letter written by Mr. Taft to a friend in Ohio on July 20, 1907, in which the present republican candidate for the presidency refused to acquiesce in the

BODY WAS SEVERED

MANGLED; REMAINS OF "PAT" TAYLOR FOUND ON TRACK NEAR DENVER DEPOT.

NO ONE SAW ACCIDENT

Man Believed to Have Been Attempting to Board Freight When He Was Killed.

Last night about 1:20, just after southbound freight No. 20 had pulled out, the body of a man was found lying on Denver track No. 1, just opposite the freight depot. From all appearances, he had attempted to catch the outgoing freight and missed his hold, falling between the cars and was literally ground to pieces. The body was cut in two just above the waist line, both hands were cut off near the wrists, and from bits of clothing scattered along the track, it was apparent that he had been dragged twenty or thirty feet.

An inquest was held this morning by Justice Brothers and from cards of various carpenters' unions found on his person, among them Tulsa, San Antonio and Beaumont, it was learned that the unfortunate man's name was Pat Taylor and that he was about 50 years of age. No further evidence of identity was found. The body was placed in Jackson Bros. morgue and will be interred this afternoon.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

About Monograms.

The strictly up to date woman sees to it that all of her possessions are marked with her initials. Everything must have the initials of its owner marked upon it—handkerchiefs, lingerie, gloves, ties, silver service, china, bed and table linen. Every single article, including dolly, sheet, washrag, towel, even the dish cloths must bear one's initials in plain black letters, old English or fancy script.

The New Neckwear.

After all, it is the small accessories of dress that often give the finished touch to a complete costume. A belt, tie, collar, gloves, bag, veil, or other detail of a toilet counts so very much more than it is oftentimes credited with doing.

The new neckwear is lovely and the woman who can look at it and get away without a purchase is a wonder. Some of the Queen Anne ruffs are dreams—perishable, of course, but so fetching that one is forgiven the extravagance of selecting them. The linen collars are prettier than ever and hand embroidery continues to be seen on almost all of them. Irish crochet is very popular and there are bows, plain collar cut on the style of the linen ones as well as the high and stunning stocks made of it. It is used with other laces and medallions of it appear in the embroidered linen coat sets. There are numbers of fetching bows of silk and satin and mull and lace that look dandy with the linen collars. There are numbers of beautiful styles of neckwear already in and each day, so the clerks say, they are getting new stuff.

Bands of Satin.

The most fragile dresses we see have trimmings of satin, called satin hems, folds, pipings and the like. This brings back the small satin button in plain and bullet shapes, always dressy when worn in large or small numbers. I have already seen some good trimming schemes with satin bands, inset with lace buttons. On one very handsome dress I found a trimming consisting of white satin cords, arranged in festoons, with buttons and pendant ornaments to give a finished appearance at the front yoke line, also upon the skirt.

Character of the Eyebrows.

Omaha Bee.

An arched eyebrow does not indicate the highest order of intelligence, but it is expressive of great sensibility, according to London Tit-Bits. Scant growth of the eyebrows indicate lack of vitality; on the contrary, heavy, thick eyebrows indicate a strong constitution and great physical endurance. They are not beautiful on a woman's face, however much they may signify either mental or bodily vigor, and when they are not heavy but droop and meet at the nose they are disagreeable and are said to accompany an insincere and prying nature. Long, drooping eyebrows, lying wide apart, indicate an amiable disposition. Where the eyebrows are lighter in color than the hair the indications are lack of vitality and great sensitiveness. Faintly defined eyebrows placed high above the nose are signs of indolence and weakness. Very black eyebrows give the face an intense and searching expression; when natural they accompany a passionate temperament. Very light eyebrows are rarely seen on strongly intellectual faces, although the color of the eyebrows is not accepted simply as denoting lack of intelligence. The form gives the key to the faculties and their direction. Red eyebrows denote great fervor and ambition; brown, a medium between the red and the black. A large head shows a person stupid and dull of apprehension; also a very small head signifies the same, but the head of the man, prognostic of a wise man, for all being neither great nor small, is the traces are irregular, and a deviation from nature and experience has made it manifest that a great head and small members do not always produce indiscretion and folly in either man or woman.

Fashion Jottings.

The "cowboy" hat will be worn this winter for a knock-about hat. They are in felt of almost every conceivable color. There is a decided flare at the left side, but, even so, many will be seen worn turned up just a bit directly in front. A sash is the nattiest trimming and this is jauntily knotted at one side or in the back.

The Parisian love of novelty has resulted in the creation of fantastic buttons with mirror centers, rimmed with gold.

The most popular automobile veils this autumn are made square instead of oblong. They are more convenient to adjust than are the narrow ones.

A fashion note from afar says that large pins have suddenly been banished from hats. This may be true in some quarters of the globe. So far, there has been little indication of any such action here. If custom counts for anything, however, the statement is worth noting, for the exaggerated hat pin has had about its share of popularity.

Distinctly new effects are featured among the new collar importations. The directoire stock is fashioned of plainings of muslin, finished with plaited band and rosette and may be had in all the light colors.

The vogue for long sleeves is growing stronger every week, so there need be no hesitancy about that detail of the new gown. The question seems to have been settled, at least for all fall and winter costumes, and the demand for short, single clasp gloves is increasing accordingly.

The craze for aigrettes and an abundance of plumes still continues and while it results in some gorgeous effects it is incidentally continuing to make millinery exceedingly costly.

The most popular blouse of the season is made of white wash net. These are laid in tucks and innocent of other trimming for the most part. Some of them are given a touch of distinction by rows of dots embroidered in wash silk in the light pastel shades.

It is interesting to note that the style in earrings has not changed. The large baroque pearls are worn against the ear, and all manner of semi-precious stones are worn in the pear-shaped drops that fall half way down in the neck.

Topaz and amethyst are the favorite colors this autumn, but nothing is more fashionable than the pearl ones which are linked together with tiny brilliants.

Of Utmost Importance.

Both of the two great political parties are amply able to show, to their own satisfaction, that the country is going to the demitton bow-wows in case the nominees of the opposing organizations are elected; likewise each of the smaller political parties is convinced that the country will go to the dogs in case either Mr. Bryan or Mr. Taft occupies the White House. As a matter of fact, whether or not split-log drags are used in his community is a matter of greater actual concern to the average farmer than the results of the November election.—Farm and Ranch.

The Wooer.

(Original.)

I met Miss Evelyn Briggs at a social of our church during the winter, and it occurred to me that she was the girl I had been looking for. She didn't give me any encouragement; but, you know, "faint heart ne'er won fair lady," and I concluded when the spring came on to go down to the Briggs' country place and call on her. I sent up my card, and she obliged me to wait some time before she made her appearance, but when she did she was quite cordial. I took courage at this, because, you see, I hadn't had an invitation. Besides, Miss Briggs' father is a lawyer, and a well to do lawyer, standing high in his profession, while I am foreman in a children's waist factory. Besides, Miss Briggs is highly educated and intellectual, while I don't make any pretense at that sort of thing. I know my business, and that's all I want to know. I can take hold of a sewing machine and do more work on it in a given time than any trio of operators in my department.

Well, we hadn't been chatting but a few minutes when Miss Briggs looked absorbed in something passing in her mind. Presently she said: "Mr. Beadle, I'm in a peck of trouble. Next week we're to have the house full of guests, and when we came down this summer we found the rats had got into our linen closet and made havoc of our sheets and pillowcases. We have the material for new ones, but the woman we expected to make them up has disappointed us. I was trying to do some of the work when you called, but there's something the matter with our sewing machine. I wonder if you could fix it for me."

"I should smile," I said, pleased to have an opportunity to be of service; "that's just in my line. There isn't a part of a sewing machine that I don't know all about. I can put your machine in order and then make her hum."

She took me upstairs to a sewing room. There was a machine at one end of it, and the rest of the room was taken up with white goods. It looked to me as if there were a thousand yards. I sat down at the machine and started it up. It went very slick.

"Why, the machine's all right," I said.

"Is it? Well, you might try it on one of these pillowcases."

She handed me the top one on a big pile, and in a few minutes I had finished it. She moved the pile up where I could reach it and said:

"I must run downstairs for a little while. Mother's not well, and I have to go into her room occasionally to see that she doesn't want for anything."

She gave me an encouraging smile and went out. I looked around at the piles of cotton and linen all ready to be sewed and remembered the princess to whom the had fairy gave impossible tasks. I had often boasted of my practical knowledge of my business and the amount of work I can do in a given time, but I had never calculated on anything like this. I thought I would be good natured about it and let Miss Briggs see by the time she came back how many pillowcases I could turn out.

She didn't come back. I worked about an hour when, getting tired, I concluded to make an excuse to stop. I broke the needle. Going downstairs, I met Miss Briggs coming up. I told her why I had to stop, but she said there was no need to give up for a little things like that, since there were plenty of needles in the house. She got me another. I put it in and went to work again reluctantly.

Miss Briggs stayed with me a little while, chatting pleasantly, and I was getting satisfied with my work when her mother called her, and she skipped out again. I expected she'd be back soon, but she didn't come. An hour passed, and I began to think up another excuse for stopping work. This time I concluded to break something that couldn't be fixed. I took a stout brass rod out of a window curtain and, inserting it in the curved arm that holds the needle, broke it off. Then I sat still awhile. I knew when Miss Briggs heard the machine stop she'd come up, and she did. When she saw the damage that had been done she looked grave for awhile. Then she smiled. I looked ruefully at the broken arm.

"Sorry," I said. "There's no way of repairing that damage. I'm afraid I can't help you any more this afternoon. There must have been a weak place in the arm. I don't like this kind of machine anyway. We never use it at the factory."

"Don't disturb yourself in the least," she replied amiably. "But I'm afraid I'll have to ask you to excuse me, for mother is worse and needs my attention every minute."

We walked out of the room together and downstairs. At the door she said: "Goodby, Mr. Briggs. I'm ever so much obliged for your kind effort to help us out, and I've no doubt you'd have done a lot more if the machine hadn't given out."

"I could have cleaned out all the work in the room before 6 o'clock," I said in a disappointed tone.

"Well, don't worry. When you come again we'll have something else for you."

"Do," I replied. "I'll show you what I can do."

"I've been thinking what I shall do to follow up my affair. I've placed Miss Briggs under a slight obligation in the work I did, but women are ungrateful creatures. And if I go again she'll feel that she must give me another job by which I can show what I can do. It's a puzzler."

JEWISH HOLIDAYS AT SUNSET FRIDAY

Next Friday at sunset begins the great holiday period of the Jewish year with the festival of Rosh Hoshonoh, or New Year. This marks the beginning of the Jewish religious year 5669, dating since the creation of the world, according to the reckoning of the Bible.

This festival is observed by orthodox Jews throughout the world for two days. In all synagogues on Friday evening and Saturday morning, services will be held.

Yom Kippur.

The greatest and most solemn religious day of the Jewish year occurs on Oct. 5—the fast day of Yom Kippur, or Day of Atonement. At sunset on Sunday, services will begin in all synagogues throughout the world to be resumed the next morning and to continue through all that day. It is generally supposed that at this service Jews pray for forgiveness for all sins committed during the year. This is not so. They pray for forgiveness of sins committed unintentionally and through ignorance. The characteristic feature of this day's worship is the fasting in accordance with the biblical injunction. In regard to the praying for the forgiveness of sins:

Judaism teaches that man is eternally responsible for all sins committed willfully, and so these are not forgiven. On Saturday, Oct. 10, occurs the beginning of the festival of Succoth, or Tabernacles, which continues for eight days. This festival commemorates the dwelling of the children of Israel in tabernacles during the forty years in the wilderness. It is the custom of many Jews to build little tabernacles, in the open spaces about their homes, or in back yards in crowded cities, adorning the little structures with flowers and fruits. Here they take their meals and some even live in the little tabernacles during the eight days of the festival. On the first and last days of the festival services are held in all synagogues.

SHOES

The average woman is no enemy to comfort, but there is little comfort to be gotten out of the shoes that most women buy. They don't even pretend to be comfortable till you have "broken them in," and after that they are soon worn out. It is different with "Dorothy Dodd" Shoes. They are comfortable from the very first hour because they are made on lasts which exactly reproduce the human foot.

Protect the Girls.

The following extract is taken from the report of the grand jury of Eastland county:

"While we do not assume to dictate to the parents of our county as to how they should manage their families, yet we find that some dark and heinous crimes are traced back to the fact that the young people, especially the young girls, have been allowed too much liberty, and seduction and other dark crimes result, so we enter this in our report as a warning to the parents of our country that they may take the proper precaution to prevent such crimes and save the young people from shame and disgrace.

"We deprecate the prevalence of the social evil, especially in the ruin of young girls, and we are sorry that the laws punishing seduction are so technical as to render the conviction of the evil doers so very difficult.

"If it were not out of order, we would recommend that the law be so amended that so much corroboration be no longer essential to establish the crime, and that an offer of marriage after a prosecution is begun would not operate as an acquittal of the guilty party.

"We hope that the better sentiments of the men of our country will appeal to them for nobler lives, that they be the protectors and not the despoilers of virtue.

"If the laws cannot be so amended as to visit punishment upon despoilers of virtue, then let the avenger of despoiled virtue be free. Let the higher laws be written on the statute books and let the gay deceivers nowhere rest in security.

"A civilization that considers the protection of the home as a secondary matter has but little of which it may boast. And a system of laws that places no adequate punishment upon the despoiler of virtue, falls far short of what an intelligent people might justly hope."

One Cost of Speed.

There is complaint that there are too many laws. Yet before we commission men to repeal them, we wish to know what are to be repealed. A great number of interests requires many laws. That our codes of procedure should be simplified is clear. There are too many delays. Yet simplifying laws and making speed often means placing power in the hands of judges. Do you wish speed at such cost?—Farm and Ranch.

Weary Widowhood.

The death of the husband not only blights the life of a Bengal widow, but makes the rest of her existence a state of unmitigated misery and privations. She is required to fast on every eleventh day of the moon, when she is debarred from all sorts of food and drink for twenty-four hours. Her sufferings from thirst on hot days of summer are extremely painful, but she must go through them. The widow must live on one meal a day and eschew meat and fish. She must renounce ornaments and all sorts of luxuries. The idea of such a state of misery of his widow keeps a man from hazardous enterprises, not because he is afraid to die, but because his death means so much misery to his wife.—East Indian Mirror.

Naming the Picture.

The artist wax of the impressionist school. He had just given the last touches to a purple and blue canvas when his wife came into the studio. "My dear," said he, "this is the landscape I wanted you to suggest a title for."

"Why not call it 'Home?' she said after a long look."
"Home? Why?"
"Because there's no place like it," she replied meekly.—Glasgow Times.

The Larcener of Sweets.

The other day over at Mount Carroll, Ill., a young man kissed a maiden lady over her protest and she went and told the justice of the peace about it and he up and fined the young man $10. He did just right—that is, the justice did. And she did just right to run and tell. But what about the young man? He used poor judgment, to be sure. But how wrong was it? What degree of larceny was it? This is an exceedingly important question, touching the guilt of thousands of unpunished criminals, and bearing vitally on the welfare of society. The degrees of osculatory larceny ought to be defined and perhaps they ought to be measured by the sincerity of the protestations. We can conceive of a justifiable larceny where the protestations are softly spoken, or accompanied by an unmistakable coyness or the tell-tale tokens of reciprocated love—such thefts are never reported. Some of our staid grandmothers, when they were girls, were robbed in precisely such fashion by our young grand fathers-to-be; and it is extremely doubtful if anybody's grandmother failed to enter at least a nominal protest to the proceedings. Who ever heard of one that walked right up and offered the very first kiss to her betrothed?

So that, as a first condition of fixing guilt and punishment, we are obliged to assume that there must always be a protest. As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end.

Yet they can't be interpreted as woman's no that means yes. Many are sincere. On the other hand, as qualifying this observation, the violation of a strict forbiddance has sometimes been forgiven, and stolen kisses have been returned with interest. A thing taken with intent to return is not technically stolen, in the law's eyes, either. Furthermore, it is a consideration to be borne in mind, touching the whole question, that the crime sometimes, may oftentimes, carries its own punishment, and the kisser is enslaved in wedlock for his pains.

The only general principle which we think will be deduced with any degree of certainty is that the crime of kissing a maid over her protest should never be committed save by a sincere young man who is convinced of the sincerity of the protest and is willing to plead guilty and take a life sentence for his crime.—St. Louis Post Dispatch.

THE BEER INDUSTRY DYING.

German Consumption Per Capita is Growing Steadily Smaller.

Berlin, Germany, Sept. 22.—Among the statistics just published by the railway department are some interesting figures concerning the export and import of beer from and to Berlin. Until 1906 the consumption of the National beverage at railway stations steadily rose; since then it has steadily fallen, and this tendency continues to show itself. Four million litres per annum is the decrease in the Berlin railway district alone, chiefly in the Munich and Pilsen sorts. With regard to Berlin white beer, its consumption and export has steadily declined for some years. It is practically a dying industry. A somewhat similar tale comes from Munich, the German beer city par excellence. The inhabitants of Munich last year drank eight litres per head less than in 1906 and twelve litres less than in 1905. On the other hand, the consumption of tea in cafes and restaurants is making large strides.

plan of the Ohio State central committee to indorse Mr. Taft for the presidency and Mr. Foraker for re-election to the senate in a single resolution. The president points out that Mr. Taft's attitude has always been directly opposed to that charged against Senator Foraker by Mr. Hearst regarding the moneyed interests. The president cites the Brownsville affair as a case where the agitation was a phase of the effort "by the representatives of certain law-defying corporations to bring discredit upon the administration." It was, he says, in large part, "not a genuine agitation on behalf of colored men at all."

As a result of publicity in connection with the recent convention of Commercial Secretaries at Ft. Worth, Secretary Gholke is in receipt of communications from the Chambers of Commerce of Elmyra and Binghampton, New York, and Board of Trade of Harrisburg, Pa., complimenting the pace set by Wichita Falls and asking for a copy of the subject 'co-operation', as regards the resolution adopted at Fort Worth wherein all commercial associations refer a synopsis of correspondence with manufacturers or wholesalers to the State Secretary after failing to locate the prospective enterprise at the point of first inquiry. In this manner the various facilities of all portions of the state would be submitted resulting without doubt in the location of the enterprise somewhere within the state. With the facilities and advantages of Wichita Falls this move should bear fruit.

Do you want a real bargain in city property? We have a few. Call on Kelper & Jackson. 106-4tc

The Company's Announcer.

(Original.)
Formerly when a railroad employee was killed at his work the officials left it to some of the dead man's friends to inform his family of their loss. Now an especial person is appointed to the position of announcer of calamity. The announcer is usually selected for his tact and benevolent appearance. His duties are certainly not attractive. To go to the home of a woman, to hear her slogging at her work, to see her children playing about the cabin, and tell that the husband and father has been mashed between two cars is about as hard a task as a sympathetic person can perform.

Thomas Nolan was announcer at that point on the V. R. and X. railroad where the shops are located and held the position so long and his duties became so well known that his simple appearance at a workman's home was all the announcement needed. Indeed, he could not walk through a street lined with cabins but each housewife would watch him with beating heart, fearing that he was looking for her.

Patrick O'Rourke, a machinist in the railway company's employ, had been in America ten years, and, having learned his trade and become so proficient as to earn good wages, he sent to Ireland for Mary-Maloney, his sweetheart. He had loved Mary when she was sixteen, a raw girl, and found her at twenty-six a full-blown woman. When he looked at her he felt that his wait and work had been well rewarded.

All went well till children came, and, with the croup and the measles and the constant attention they needed even when well, Mary's nerves began to take on an edge and she lost her equanimity. When Pat came home in the evening, tired with standing over a machine all day and an occasional digression in lifting some heavy weight, he would find her cross and irritable. He was a good natured chap, full of Irish humor, and would usually try to laugh his wife out of the complaints she poured forth. But such work is harder than handling machinery, he is ever so heavy, and after a while Pat began to get irritable himself.

At last there came a breach. The pair had quarreled most of one night, but in the morning Pat tried to make it up with his wife.

"Yer havin' a hard time of it, Mary, I know, with the constant cookin' and sewin' for the children and havin' to keep 'em from doin' the thousand things they shouldn't do all day long till they're asleep at night, but don't the wife of every workin' man who has children have to bear the same? And 'em as hasn't children are awful envious of them that has. Try and take a more reasonable view of it, Mary. Think of how well yer off to have a man to earn a livin' for you and the children and how bad it would be if I were takin' away from you and you had to work for a livin' as well as look out for the children."

She turned away from him in a huff, and he was obliged to go to his work with the breach still open. Mary spent the morning brooding. She considered that she'd married the wrong man. She recalled the hot words he had said to her during the night and either forgot the hotter words she had said to him or considered them lustily spoken. Toward noon she began to cool down. Pat never came home to dinner, and perhaps it was as well to-day that he did not, for she was not in a condition to avoid treating him harshly. By evening she would be ready to at least drop the quarrel, though she never went through a process of making up. Pat often wished they could end their misunderstanding as they used to, by lovers' kisses, but the time for that seemed past.

When the hour for Pat to come home for the evening drew near Mary began to feel uncomfortable. She wished to go to him and throw her arms around his neck and say that she had acted "horrid" and all that, but somehow she couldn't. Perhaps she thought that if she did it would only encourage Pat to "tyrannize" over her in future. But she made a nice dish of beefsteak and onions for Pat's supper. He was very fond of the combination and by giving him the dish she could get the comfort of a confession without really making it.

She was standing over the supper when something, she knew not what, prompted her to turn her head and look out through the open door. The cabin stood alone, and she had an unobstructed view. There came Tom Nolan, the company's announcer, making straight for her cabin.

A few minutes later there was a step on the threshold. Mary did not hear it, for she lay on the floor in a swoon. It was not Tom Nolan's step, for he had passed on without entering the cabin. It was Mary's husband, who entered and saw her lying, white and rigid, on the floor. He was terribly frightened.

"Mary, darlin', what's happened to ye?"
Whether it was the sound of her husband's voice or the time for a revival had come, Mary opened her eyes.

"Oh, Pat," she cried, "is it you or your ghost?"

"It's me, Mary. Why d'ye think it's me ghost?"

"It's only a bit ago that Tom Nolan was comin', and I thought he was goin' to tell me that you'd been killed."

That she was blessed with a husband and a good one had been forcibly brought home to Mary, and from that day she was a model of patience. Soon after the episode the railway company appointed a new announcer.

FLORENCE NORTON.

The God of Murderers.

In a certain mountain village called Laltuk, on the northwest frontier of Burma, is a sacred pool, in which is said to live a nat—i. e., a demon—called Shearpanai, who is the guardian spirit of murderers. When a murder is committed anywhere in these hills, the water of this pool is reported to turn blood red.

Now, when this happens it is a warning sign to the villagers, who are the wardens of the pool, to be on their guard lest the murderer, whoever he may be and from whatever village he may come unobserved, succeed in reaching the pool, for the Chin law or custom is that if a murderer manages to elude the "avengers of blood" (who are usually some near blood relatives of the victim) and the vigilance of the guardians of the pool and succeeds in gaining it and washes his hands in its blood red water, which as soon as this occurs resumes its usual appearance, testifying that the god of murder is appeased, he is absolved from his blood guiltiness and is thereafter a free man, and no one may henceforth molest him.

On the other hand, if he were overtaken by his pursuers or were he prevented by the village guardians from reaching the pool he would speedily pay the penalty of his crime with his life.—London Answers.

Proper Way to Ride.

"The fatigue of a long journey of which persons often complain," said an experienced traveler, "is quite unnecessary and comes from an unconscious effort to carry the train instead of letting the train carry us. This is in resisting the motion instead of relaxing and yielding to it. In a railroad car one should always rest the feet on the rail of the seat in front, if such is provided, as to keep the feet off the floor lessens the vibration that is conveyed to the body and prevents just that much strain. In a Pullman, where foot rests are not usually provided, a bag will do as well for a footstool if nothing else is to be had. The body, while you are sitting in a car, should be as completely relaxed as possible. Until one attempts this relaxation on a railroad car it is not noticed how tense is the effort to resist the motion, all of which is in direct accordance with modern physical culture, which has discovered that true repose goes further than mere nonaction."

Some Clever Short Stories

A Mis Interpretation.

A Manila mother-in-law had stayed so often with her daughter as to cause a quarrel with the husband, and one day, when she again came to stay, she found her daughter in tears on the doorstep.

"I suppose George has left you," she sniffed.

"Yes" (sob).
"Then there's a woman in the case?" she asked, her eyes lighting up expectantly.

"Yes" (sob).
"Who is it?" she demanded.

"You" (sob).
"Gracious," exclaimed the mother-in-law, "I'm sure I've never given him any encouragement."—Philippine Gossip.

Cause of Her Illness.

A gentleman riding in a railroad train was impressed with two passengers, one a pretty, delicately appearing young lady, and the other a plain-faced maid. When the mistress was at dinner the gentleman remarked to the maid in a tone of great sympathy:

"Your young lady seems very ill."

"Yes, sir; she suffers badly."

"Consumption, I should fear?"

"No, sir; I am sorry to say it is of the heart."

"Dear me! Aneurism?"

"Oh, no, sir! It is only a lieffenant in the navy."

Who Did?

Everybody's Magazine.

One of our subscribers writes us that William Balfour Ker's picture, "The First Spank," reminds him of the following story: A little fellow who had just felt the hard side of the slipper, when the tears had dried somewhat, turned to his mother. "Mother," he asked, "did grandpa spank father when he was a little boy?"

"Yes," answered his mother impressively.

"And did his father whip him when he was little?"

"Yes."

"And did his father spank him?"

"Yes."

A pause.

"Well, who started this thing, anyway?"

Vance's Financial Knowledge.

During the debate in the senate one day on the Aldrich bill, Senator Lodge, deploring the apparently limited knowledge of the present membership of the senate regarding financial problems, told a story the late Senator Vance used to tell of his speech in North Carolina during a financial crisis, when he faced his audience and modestly admitted that, in fact, he knew very little about finance. "About the only financial principle with which I am entirely familiar," Senator Vance added, "is that it takes two names to float my note."

No One Questions It.

Judge.

An automobile party was touring through the mountains of Western Pennsylvania and had made a stop in one of the small towns to make some repairs to the machine. While they were waiting the attention of one of the party was called to an intelligent looking lad of about 14, who seemed to be very much interested in the work, and of whom the following question was asked:

"Say, son, what do you live on out here?"

"Nuthin'" replied the somewhat surprised youth. "Dad's a preacher."

A Strange Elopement.

[Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure.]
I was mate of the American brig Homer Lee, commanded by Captain Saunders, and we had been lying in the pool at London for forty days to get a cargo for some port in the United States. The captain was the sole owner of the brig, and as he was not a wealthy man and as the preceding voyages had been without profit it began to look as if it were the end of his mercantile career. On the fortieth day, when things seemed to have reached their worst, a waterman

ed a gentleman out to the craft.

We spotted the man to be a gentleman and some one not at all interested in shipping as soon as he came aboard. I believe to this day that he was a man of title and wealth, though I haven't the faintest idea of his name. He asked to look the craft over, and our first idea was that he was looking to buy a ship. The Lee had a fine cabin and staterooms, having once been a passenger packet to South American ports, and after an investigation the stranger, who gave the name of Montgomery and who was a man about forty years old, announced himself as satisfied and then desired to charter the brig for New York. The story he told was that his wife was in poor health and that the doctor had recommended a slow sea voyage. He did not want other passengers aboard, nor did he want to wait for cargo. He offered a much higher price for the passage of the two than we could have got from an average cargo and would furnish all the cabin stores in addition. One of the stipulations made was that we were to engage a cook above the ordinary and carry a steward. Another was that the two were to dine by themselves.

We began engaging a crew and taking stores aboard the next day, and in four days we were ready. No merchantman sailing the seas ever took such cabin stores aboard. The wines alone would have lasted half a dozen people for a voyage of sixty days, while the provisions were what any rich man would have ordered for his pantry. Montgomery himself came aboard at least an hour before the lady did. She waited for darkness, and as soon as ever her feet touched the deck she went to the cabin, and a tug took our line and started down the river.

It was at breakfast next morning and we were well down the channel and had cast off the tug, when there was a row in the cabin. We could catch nothing that Montgomery said, but the voice of the lady could be heard through the open skylight to the foremast. She surely had a tongue on her. As a matter of fact, she swore like a trooper, and the man could not quiet her. She called him a rascal, a rogue, a liar and many other things and ended up by throwing crockery at him. The captain and I heard it all and were amazed. For a sick wife the lady seemed very vigorous. It was not for us to interfere, however. In about half an hour Montgomery came on deck for a smoke and a promenade. He seemed to think some explanation due, and he said that his wife was a quick tempered woman and was blaming him that mail had not been provided for her. She did not show herself during the day, and we heard no more rows. That night we had something of a gale that remained with us for three days and brought her seasickness, and none of us heard anything from her. Montgomery attended her and had very little to say.

It was on the fifth morning after leaving London and we were well out on the Atlantic when Captain Saunders was called into the cabin by the woman. To his great surprise, he found her a person at least fifty years old. She was not even commonly good looking. On the contrary, she would have been called homely anywhere, and the wrinkles in her face betrayed her age. She began abusing Montgomery as if he had been a pickpocket. She called him hard names, and she swore. She declared that she would go no farther in his company and must be transferred to the first craft bound for London. Montgomery, at first tried to soothe her, but she yelled and screamed and finally would have used her nails on his face had not the captain interposed. The woman denied that she was his wife and said that he had grossly deceived her into the situation, and she offered Captain Saunders $100 to transfer her that day. Montgomery finally told her to go if she so desired, and that settled it. Within an hour we raised a lumber vessel coming from the American coast. The woman was informed as to what sort of craft it was and that the accommodations would be very meager, but she insisted on being transferred. She offered the other captain $100 to receive her and was duly landed on the lumber laden decks. Neither she nor Montgomery had had a word in farewell. Of all her baggage she would take only one single trunk, telling Captain Saunders that he could have the rest for his wife.

Montgomery made no explanations after the ships parted. Indeed, it did not seem as if there was anything he could say. He simply read, smoked and walked the decks, and three days later he was also transferred. In going he presented the captain with a trunkful of fine clothing and all the cabin stores. We had been paid a good price for the run, and with these things on top of it the Lee made one of the most prosperous runs in her history. As to the elopement, for I feel sure that it was one, I never heard further. I was at pains to keep track of the London papers for weeks afterward, but they contained no mention of it. M. QUAD.

Every Non-Progressive Merchant Becomes Your Competitor When You Cease to Advertise

WHEN a merchant "slows up" in his advertising, and concludes to "save a little money" in that direction, then the merchant who never had the courage and foresight to advertise adequately BECOMES A REAL COMPETITOR. Even the merchant who never advertises at all reaps a certain amount of profit from the "slowing up" process of the live store. Not many merchants, of course, who have at any time set the pace for progressive advertising, will be content to take a backward plunge into the company of the non-progressives, of the LITTLE MERCHANTS, the easily satisfied ones, the un-awakes! But that is just what the "live one" does when he imagines that his advertising is costing too much, and that its curtailment means saving. If business conditions ever suggest retrenchment in advertising, the wise merchant knows that this should be interpreted as a signal for "full speed ahead," for redoubled efforts to WIN the business that does not come so easily as usual. :: :: :: :: :: :: ::

"Gracious," exclaimed the mother-in-law, "I'm sure I've never given him any encouragement."—Philippine Gossip.

Cause of Her Illness.

A gentleman riding in a railroad train was impressed with two passengers, one a pretty, delicately appearing young lady, and the other a plain-faced maid. When the mistress was at dinner the gentleman remarked to the maid in a tone of great sympathy:

"Your young lady seems very ill."

"Yes, sir; she suffers badly."

"Consumption, I should fear?"

"No, sir; I am sorry to say it is of the heart."

"Dear me! Aneurism?"

"Oh, no, sir! It is only a lieutenant in the navy."

Who Did?

Everybody's Magazine.

One of our subscribers writes us that William Balfour Ker's picture, "The First Spank," reminds him of the following story: A little fellow who had just felt the hard side of the slipper, when the tears had dried somewhat, turned to his mother. "Mother," he asked, "did grandpa spank father when he was a little boy?"

"Yes," answered his mother impressively.

"And did his father whip him when he was little?"

"Yes."

"And did his father spank him?"

"Yes."

A pause.

"Well, who started this thing, anyway?"

He—Oh, yes!

She—Then how can you ask so many fool questions, when you see that I am alone and entirely at your mercy!

Vance's Financial Knowledge.

During the debate in the senate one day on the Aldrich bill, Senator Lodge, deploring the apparently limited knowledge of the present membership of the senate regarding financial problems, told a story the late Senator Vance used to tell of his speech in North Carolina during a financial crisis, when he faced his audience and modestly admitted that, in fact, he knew very little about finance. "About the only financial principle with which I am entirely familiar," Senator Vance added, "is that it takes two names to float my note."

No One Questions It.

Judge.

An automobile party was touring through the mountains of Western Pennsylvania and had made a stop in one of the small towns to make some repairs to the machine. While they were waiting the attention of one of the party was called to an intelligent looking lad of about 14, who seemed to be very much interested in the work, and of whom the following question was asked:

"Say, son, what do you live on out here?"

"Nuthin'" replied the somewhat surprised youth. "Dad's a preacher."

A Strange Elopement.

[Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure.]

I was mate of the American brig Homer Lee, commanded by Captain Saunders, and we had been lying in the pool at London for forty days to get a cargo for some port in the United States. The captain was the sole owner of the brig, and as he was not a wealthy man and as the preceding voyages had been without profit it began to look as if it were the end of his mercantile career. On the fortieth day, when things seemed to have reached their worst, a waterman and a gentleman out to the craft.

We spotted the man to be a gentleman and some one not at all interested in shipping as soon as he came aboard. I believe to this day that he was a man of title and wealth, though I haven't the faintest idea of his name. He asked to look the craft over, and our first idea was that he was looking to buy a ship. The Lee had a fine cabin and staterooms, having once been a passenger packet to South American ports, and after an investigation the stranger, who gave the name of Montgomery and who was a man about forty years old, announced himself as satisfied and then desired to charter the brig for New York. The story he told was that his wife was in poor health and that the doctor had recommended a slow sea voyage. He did not want other passengers aboard, nor did he want to wait for cargo. He offered a much higher price for the passage of the two than we could have got from an average cargo and would furnish all the cabin stores in addition. One of the stipulations made was that we were to engage a cook above the ordinary and carry a steward. Another was that the two were to dine by themselves.

We began engaging a crew and taking stores aboard the next day, and in four days we were ready. No merchantman sailing the seas ever took such cabin stores aboard. The wines alone would have lasted half a dozen people for a voyage of sixty days, while the provisions were what any rich man would have ordered for his pantry. Montgomery himself came aboard at least an hour before the lady did. She waited for darkness, and as soon as ever her feet touched the deck she went to the cabin, and a tug took our line and started down the river.

It was at breakfast next morning and we were well down the channel and had cast off the tug, when there was a row in the cabin. We could catch nothing that Montgomery said, but the voice of the lady could be heard through the open skylight to the foremast. She surely had a tongue on her. As a matter of fact, she swore like a trooper, and the man could not quiet her. She called him a rascal, a rogue, a liar and many other things and ended up by throwing crockery at him. The captain and I heard it all and were amazed. For a sick wife the lady seemed very vigorous. It was not for us to interfere, however. In about half an hour Montgomery came on deck for a smoke and a promenade. He seemed to think some explanation due, and he said that his wife was a quick tempered woman and was blaming him that mail had not been provided for her. She did not show herself during the day, and we heard no more rows. That night we had something of a gale that remained with us for three days and brought her seasickness, and none of us heard anything from her. Montgomery attended her and had very little to say.

It was on the fifth morning after leaving London and we were well out on the Atlantic when Captain Saunders was called into the cabin by the woman. To his great surprise, he found her a person at least fifty years old. She was not even commonly good looking. On the contrary, she would have been called homely anywhere, and the wrinkles in her face betrayed her age. She began abusing Montgomery as if he had been a pickpocket. She called him hard names, and she swore. She declared that she would go no farther in his company and must be transferred to the first craft bound for London. Montgomery at first tried to soothe her, but she yelled and screamed and finally would have used her nails on his face had not the captain interposed. The woman denied that she was his wife and said that he had grossly deceived her into the situation, and she offered Captain Saunders $100 to transfer her that day. Montgomery finally told her to go if she so desired, and that settled it. Within an hour we raised a lumber vessel coming from the American coast. The woman was informed as to what sort of craft it was and that the accommodations would be very meager, but she insisted on being transferred. She offered the other captain $100 to receive her and was duly landed on the lumber laden decks. Neither she nor Montgomery had had a word in farewell. Of all her baggage she would take only one single trunk, telling Captain Saunders that he could have the rest for his wife.

Montgomery made no explanations after the ships parted. Indeed, it did not seem as if there was anything he could say. He simply read, smoked and walked the decks, and three days later he was also transferred. In going he presented the captain with a trunkful of fine clothing and all the cabin stores. We had been paid a good price for the run, and with these things on top of it the Lee made one of the most prosperous runs in her history. As to the elopement, for I feel sure that it was one, I never heard further. I was at pains to keep track of the London papers for weeks afterward, but they contained no mention of it.

Every Non-Progressive Merchant Becomes Your Competitor When You Cease to Advertise

WHEN a merchant "slows up" in his advertising, and concludes to "save a little money" in that direction, then the merchant who never had the courage and foresight to advertise adequately BECOMES A REAL COMPETITOR. Even the merchant who never advertises at all reaps a certain amount of profit from the "slowing up" process of the live store. Not many merchants, of course, who have at any time set the pace for progressive advertising, will be content to take a backward plunge into the company of the non-progressives, of the LITTLE MERCHANTS, the easily satisfied ones, the un-awakes! But that is just what the "live one" does when he imagines that his advertising is costing too much, and that its curtailment means saving. If business conditions ever suggest retrenchment in advertising, the wise merchant knows that this should be interpreted as a signal for "full speed ahead," for redoubled efforts to WIN the business that does not come so easily as usual. :: :: :: :: :: :: ::

A Pleasant Outing.
The Ladies' Aid Society of the Presbyterian church had a most delightful outing at Lake Wichita yesterday. According to previous arrangement, at 9 o'clock the good ladies began to collect at the church, bringing with them conveyances, bibles and baskets. Some, growing impatient, went on, leaving instructions for the rest to follow. When the last vehicle, containing by no means the least occupants, arrived at the lake, it was with genuine delight that they viewed the camp fire burning and the steam rising from a savory chicken stew. Some half-dozen ladies vied with each other in watching the kettle, while one, specially noted for her practical way of doing things, rolled the dumplings on an improvised biscuit board near by.

Ichabod Crane's dream of "dainty slapsacks, well buttered and garnished with honey, by the delicate little, dimpled hand of Katrina," together with his future prospect of "fat turkey gobblers, neatly dressed and nesting in huge bowls of gizzard-gravy" could have brought no more genuine pleasure than did the savory odor from the steaming stew, together with that of the motherly coffee pot, sending up its clouds of vapor, bring to those two belated members.

While the sedate matrons mentioned above busied themselves here and there in preparation of this feast, some of the more frivolous minded furnished amusement for the crowd by performing wonderful feats of horsemanship—feats really worthy of more elaborate mention than can possibly be given in the columns of a newspaper.

When dinner was announced and the good things began to disappear, we were again forcibly reminded of the sumptuous meal in the Van Tassel mansion, to which Ichabod did such ample justice.

Dinner over, the president, Mrs. Carrigan, called the meeting to order and after transacting the usual business an interesting discussion of the Sunday school lessons for the past quarter was heartily entered into by all present. This was followed by pleasant conversation, interspersed with fruit punch and cake, and the afternoon sped rapidly by. At 5:30 o'clock seventeen tired but light-hearted persons turned their faces homeward, declaring this had been one of the most delightful days in the history of the society.
