NOT WHILE A NATIVE TEXAN LIVES

One of the most disgusting and nauseating propositions to a native born Texan that we ever heard of, and which makes even the adopted sons of the State boil with indignation, is that proposed and advocated by President Frank Trumbull of the Colorado and Southern railroad, to the effect that in accordance with a provision in the resolution that admitted Texas into the union of States, it is possible for this great one-time republic to divide herself into four separate States. Of course, he does not openly advocate such a move at the present time, but has caused the resolution of 1845 to be published in one or more papers in the State on the thought that the "people might like to know of it," and thus possibly get an agitation stirred on the subject by some disgruntled politicians.

Of course it does not require the wisdom of a Solomon to discern the selfish motives of Mr. Trumbull and his ilk in this matter. Texas has a large mileage of railroads and if his contemptible scheme could be effectually accomplished it would mean that the railroads could derive almost double the amount of gross earnings on the same labor performed that they now enjoy, since, according to the laws of Texas, a shipment from one to another point within the State is hauled much cheaper than would the same consignment be transported to a point without the State, and within the same distance. Therefore, if four States could be made from the one, nearly every line in Texas would become an intrastate railroad.

All for "Business."
Houston Post.

In charging that the republican party no longer represents the conscience and morality of the American people, Mr. Bryan states what concrete facts abundantly prove. During the campaign now drawing to a close, no republican of consequence has made an appeal for a moral principle. Every campaign argument has been based upon a false hypothesis and every appeal has been directed to what is sordid in human nature. The platform adopted at Denver has not been attacked. The character of the democratic candidate has not been assailed by any reputable authority. The arguments of the democratic candidate have not been answered.

The burden of the republican contention has been that any change of party at this time would hurt business, and that however eloquent the demands of the democratic party for righteousness and justice in government, business could not endure the shock of a change.

It will prove a dark day for the republic when public sentiment becomes so atrophied that the cardinal virtues must be ignored upon the plat that material considerations require it. In the first place, material prosperity can never depend upon a departure from righteous principles. It may be, of course, that some special interests may temporarily thrive through error, but the common welfare is bound to suffer when a people turn their backs upon righteousness for fear they may lose some money.

What do we find the republicans doing at the present moment? They are obtaining from the monopolies that have long oppressed the people vast sums of money, for what purpose? Clearly to corrupt those voters who can be tempted to sell their suffrages for money. And those who are too honest to be purchased are subjected to dire threats of reduced wages or idleness if they dare vote their honest convictions. And all this is done in the name of business. Intelligent men know very well that legitimate business does not depend upon these crimes against suffrage, but it is quite possible that illegitimate business and oppressive monopolies may require such expedients.

No thoughtful citizen can behold the attempt the republican party is making to debase the American suffrage without feeling that the enemies of the republic in their blindness and greed are striking at the very pillars of the temple. How long can our institutions, dependent as they are upon the intelligence and conscience of the people themselves, endure such destructive influences? Men who are in the habit of excusing any sort of infamy provided business demands it ought to pause now and then and consider what the ultimate consequences of corruption even upon the business which so much concerns them.

Whatever the result of the election, the people of the United States will have to give serious attention to the methods so flagrantly practiced by the republican party, because no nation has ever survived such corruption and no nation ever can.

The Origin of the Bolster.

Do all of you know the origin of the bolster? It isn't seen so much nowadays as it was a generation or so ago. Bolsters were said to have been introduced into England by some of the Crusaders, who had seen them in the East. The English housewife, so they say, was ignorant of the real use of the bolster and so placed it at the head of the bed under the pillows, a custom that has been followed ever since. The true use of it was a support for the back and as such it should be placed at right angles with the head of the bed, not parallel to it.

A Good Breakfast Dish.

Break three eggs into a bowl and beat them lightly with the egg beater. Stir into the egg one-half cup of finely shredded dried beef, one cup of fresh milk and two rolled crackers; season to taste. In the frying pan put a tablespoonful of butter and one-half teaspoonful of lard. Let it get very hot, then pour in the mixture and stir constantly until it is done. It should not be allowed to get too hard or brown. When eggs are scarce, this makes a very appetizing breakfast omelet.

New made Richelleu buckwheat and pancake flour. Two packages for 25c. Give it a trial. 147-11 TREVATHAN & BLAND.

Who is Most Faithful.

A girl places three lighted candles at an open window, each candle being named for a sweetheart. The candle which is blown out first shows fickleness, but the one that flickers in the breeze, yet burns brightly, shows who will remain faithful.

Here are some conundrums on nuts, which will add to the evening's enjoyment. English walnuts are procured, halved and the meat extracted. Into the cavities one of the conundrums, written on a small piece of paper, is placed and the two shells are glued together. During the evening the nuts are cracked and the answers to the conundrums written down and read:

- What nut suggests a fog? Hazel(n) nut.
- What nut suggests a portion of the body? Chestnut.
- What nut is best with bread? But-ternut.
- What nut do you dislike on your feet? Acorn.
- What nut reminds you of the sea? Beechnut.
- What nut recalls a Chinese duck? Pecan nut.
- What nut would make a good fence? Walnut.
- What nut reminds you of a spiritless person? Pine-nut.
- Others of a similar nature will readily suggest themselves.

An Electoral Chatecaism.

Will the president of the United States be elected November 3? He will not. The people in each State will merely choose a set of electors, most of whom they have never heard.

What will the electors do? They will assemble in their State capitals the second Monday in January and ballot for president and vice president. Each of these assemblies is called an electoral college. There are as many electoral colleges as there are States. The territories and the District of Columbia have no presidential vote.

Supposing a candidate should die between the November election and the date of the assembling of the electoral colleges? The electors would probably receive instructions from a national convention or from recognized party leaders. In 1872, when Greeley, the minority candidate, died after the election, his votes were scattered. Six Georgia electors, for instance, voted for B. Gratz Brown and three for Greeley. The Greeley votes were rejected by congress. Thomas A. Hendricks and Brown divided the votes that had been intended for Greeley.

After the voting what is done? A certified copy is sent by special messenger to Washington. On the second Wednesday in February congress meets to count the votes and to announce the election.

If there is a dispute over the electoral vote of certain States, as there was in 1876, what is done? In 1887 Congress enacted a law providing that if double returns should be sent in, the one should be received which has the certificate of the State tribunal appointed to canvass the vote—that is, it is left to the State authorities to decide whether the electoral votes are cast by electors duly chosen.

How are the number of electors for each State determined? Each State has as many as it has senators and representatives.

Does the constitution prescribe how electors must be chosen? No. It leaves this to the States. Are they not always voted for on a general ticket? They happen to be now. But a legislature may provide differently. In 1876 the Colorado legislature chose the State electors. Thomas Watson said the other day that under the laws of Georgia if no ticket receives a majority in Georgia the choice of electors is thrown into the legislature. In 1892 Michigan voted on its electors by congressional districts.

How do States sometimes split their electoral votes?

Occasionally a popular elector will receive enough complimentary votes to elect him, even if his fellows on the ticket are defeated. Sometimes mistakes in marking ballots will result in a divided electoral vote in a close State.

What determines the date of the national election?

In 1845 congress prescribed that it be held on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November. Before that time some of the States held elections on different days.

Does a plurality in the electoral college elect?

No. The constitution provides if no candidate shall receive a majority of the electoral votes the election shall be thrown into the House, the three highest candidates only being voted on.

How does the House vote?

It votes by States, a majority of the members from each State casting its vote.

Has an election ever been thrown into the House?

Yes, twice: in 1800, when Jefferson was elected, and in 1824, when John Quincy Adams became president.

Can a man be elected by a minority of the popular vote?

Yes. In 1824 Andrew Jackson had a plurality of 50,000 over J. Q. Adams, and in 1888 Grover Cleveland had a plurality of nearly 100,000 over Benjamin Harrison.

NEW STATE IS PROPOSED

ORIENT OFFICER SAYS MOVE IS ON FOOT TO SEPARATE PECOS VALLEY COMMONWEALTH.

Kansas City, Mo., Oct. 28.—The new State movement now being pushed in the famous Pecos Valley of Texas, is making headway, according to Fred A. Hornbeck, land commissioner of the Orient railroad, who has just returned from an auto and stage tour of the trans-Pecos region.

"This proposed new State will contain 55,000 square miles," said Mr. Hornbeck. "It will embrace one-fifth of the area of Texas as the great State now exists. Alpine, on our main road to Old Mexico, will be the center of this new State, which should be called Pecos, comprising as it does the rich irrigated and undeveloped Pecos valley. El Paso is striving to be the first capital of Pecos, and will be perhaps until the Kansas City, Mexico and Orient builds through Alpine, thence south to El Oro. Fort Stockton is another possible competitor for the new State capitol. I was in Fort Stockton a week ago, and it is as pretty a site for a town of 10,000 in three years as I ever saw. The largest natural springs in Texas are located there.

"The new State of Pecos comprises all the land lying south and west of the Pecos river, with a frontage of 400 miles on the Rio Grande. It is now a cattle country except where reservoirs have been built and artesian wells dug; then the soil, naturally rich, produces fruit and alfalfa in abundance."

Games for Halloween.

As Halloween is always understood to be the one night in the year when witches and elves and fairies appear to wander about the earth, the program for Halloween celebration must partake of the weird and grotesque. The principal thing in a Halloween party is to have the jolliest, romping time possible, and guests and hosts alike should be eager to contribute to the fun and merriment. It is not advisable to wear party clothes or anything that is easily soiled or torn.

There are games and tricks innumerable for such an occasion:

Ducking for Apples.

Procure a large tub and fill it over half full with water. Into this place a lot of apples. The object is to catch the apples with the teeth, and the best way to do this is to plunge the head bodily into the water, not heeding the water, and follow the apple to the bottom of the tub. To increase the interest, a prize may be given to the one securing the most apples.

Apple and Candles.

Hang a stick longitudinally by a string from the ceiling. On one end of the stick place an apple, and on the other a lighted candle. The stick will twist around and the object is to catch the apple with the teeth without using the hands. For the candle, a biscuit covered with molasses may be substituted and popcorn balls may be used instead of apples.

As forecasting the future should form an important part of a Halloween celebration, the following charms and games will be found to help along the fun:

Chestnuts and Apples.

Chestnuts in their burrs are placed in front of the fire by each guest, and the prizes of the future will be told by the speedy or slow opening of the burr. Apples, also, twirling from a piece of string, will bring weal or woe to the owner, according as the apple shall burst open or scorch and dry up.

Saucer Charm.

Wealth or poverty can be told with three saucers. One is filled with salt, denoting silver; another with cornmeal signifying gold, and the third is left empty. The one to test the charm is blindfolded, brought in front of the three saucers and told to dip the left hand into one. If he touches the cornmeal, then he is to be very wealthy; if the salt, he will be just comfortable, but if his hand touches

After November 3rd Mr. William Howard Taft will be given much leisure to prepare a treatise on "A Presidential Campaign to Reduce Obesity."

The president and the members of his cabinet are now engaged showing all subordinate Federal officeholders how to avoid pernicious political activity.

Chairman Mack believes the chancellor is due for a mighty crow, the first in sixteen long years, next Tuesday night—if the republican foxes can be kept away from the barn yard.

Chairman Mack urges the democracy to poll a full vote in every State. Mack is unreasoning; since the spread of local option many a Kentucky colt can't be even half full when he votes.

The campaign will not grow dull. Governor Haskell will address another letter to Roosevelt on Sunday. The president is due for another epistle on Monday and Hearst is likely to break out again before Friday.

One thing is certain—if the report that Chairman Hitchcock has $2,000,000 to spend in the doubtful States on election day for the success of the republican ticket proves untrue, there'll be many disappointed patriots in those States.

The Democratic State ticket is in no danger of defeat, but the republicans, by nominating as their candidate for governor an ex-Confederate soldier who, in his dotage, turned republican, hope to poll a strong vote. Campbell is the nominee of the democratic party and as such is entitled to receive the support of every honest democrat who participated in the democratic primaries. That there will be a few who will scratch his name and write that of the republican candidate, goes without saying, but democrats who play this kind of politics are not the kind of democrats that should be given honors by the party. In fact, the party, as an organization, is better off with that kind eliminated from the ranks. Texas had one republican governor, during the days of reconstruction, and Texas has not yet fully recovered from the "graft" inflicted upon her by Edmund J. Davis' administration. It will be ample time for Texas to elect another republican governor after she has fully recovered from the effects of the last one. The methods adopted by the State chairman of the republican party of Texas are similar to those practiced by the national republican party, which means that if there was any chance of electing the ticket, it would not for a moment hesitate to corrupt the ballot. Let every loyal democrat go to the polls on November 3rd and vote a straight ticket from Bryan down to constable, and if this is done Governor Campbell will not fall behind the head of the ticket.

WORK ON THE ORIENT.

Favorable Progress Reported on Work of Closing Up Gaps in Texas.

Houston, Oct. 28.—Work on the line of the Kansas City, Mexico and Orient railroad, which will eventually connect the middle west with the Pacific coast of Mexico, is progressing rapidly, and with the materialization of the loan negotiated by President Stillwell as mentioned recently in the Post, affairs along the line of the new road would appear to be progressing favorably.

The line is already completed from Kansas City to Elmer, Okla., on the Texas border. From here a gap must be closed to Truscott, Texas, from which point the road is built south as far as Sweetwater. From Sweetwater it will be necessary to build to a point about twenty-five miles above San Angelo, and it is reported that steel and ties for the construction of this part of the line are already on the ground. From San Angelo the road will be constructed south to El Dorado, where it is proposed to start toward the border with the main line, leaving a branch to shoot down through one of the richest parts of Texas, either to Corpus Christi or Aransas Pass. This branch will prove a boon to those who are living in counties which are not touched by the railroads, and will be the means of further settling up this country, which is suited to all sorts of fruit and vegetable culture.

Several gaps remain to be closed in Mexico on the main line, as was recently mentioned in the Post, but these are not large, and will probably be finished by the time the Texas division of the road reaches the border.

COFFEE

Rich, Delicious and Aromatic

Yes there is a big difference in coffees. Just as there is in apples or potatoes.

Some coffee plantations are particularly favored as to soil, climate and cultivation and you can imagine that such a plantation would produce a better grade of coffee than a less favored plantation.

Revere Brand

of highland coffee comes from some of South and Central America's most favored plantations.

The soil, climate and cultivation on these coffee fields all combine to make Revere Coffee the most perfect coffee produced. It's really worth more than we charge for it.

A Change of Season.

[Copyright, 1908, by American Press Association.]

When Miss Jeannette Perkins went to the country for a couple of months in summer it was for the purpose of relaxation. The winter social season with Miss Perkins was her "busy day." Born in the swim, with no expectation of a dowry, it was her business to marry an establishment. None of the young men she had met during the winter—that she could get—filled the measure of her requirements. Some were stupid, some dissipated, some puffed with vanity and none of them quite rich enough. Miss Perkins' social position required as a minimum $10,000 a year, and it was her ambition to land three or four times that amount.

Tired of the social functions which she had constantly felt obliged to attend for a matrimonial purpose, when July came she resolved to go to some middle class resort where she would throw off the artificial and be refreshed by the natural. But even this was a part of her general plan, for she felt that some real love-making would give zest to her abilities as a charmer when engaged in hunting down a millionaire.

Miss Perkins received a heart freshening that she had not bargained for. One Howard Dangler, a recent graduate of a school for civil engineers, talked so enthusiastically of the life work before him and showed so plainly that his career would be the better for her wifely encouragement and affection that he quite flustered her. Not that she had any idea of seriously listening to his bubbling chat—not she

—she had no use for love in a cottage and the care of children while her husband would be absent—often for long terms—in various parts of the world fighting his way in his profession. But when the season being over, they separated on a steamboat landing, standing apart from the crowd, the love-light in Miss Perkins' eyes was not all assumed.

But this is a world of change. It is December. Miss Perkins is handed a card on which is engraved the name of Howard Dangler. A faint change of color comes over her face, followed by indications of resolution. She goes to the drawing room, entering with a cold dignity. It is not July, but December, and Miss Perkins would not be out of season. She extends her hand to her visitor as a queen would extend hers to a subject who has carried her train over a ditch that he may receive his reward.

"How do you do, Mr. Dangler? How good of you to look me up! You are the only one of my summer acquaintances that I have met again."

The words "summer acquaintances" are spoken in an unmistakable tone.

"I have not been to your city before since I met you," stammers Mr. Dangler, "or I would have." Then, seeing that he is making matters worse, he stops and reddens.

Miss Perkins does not help him. Indeed, she sits mute, waiting for him to untangle himself. He goes off into something about "that delightful season," checks himself and, with a touch of melancholy, speaks of the "formal winter," then comes again to a stop. This time Miss Perkins condescends to make a remark.

"Do you remain for some time in the city?"

The words conveyed the idea that she would be willing he should leave by the next train.

By this time Mr. Dangler was beginning to recover himself. When he spoke again it was in a conventional tone, with which he seemed to be quite as familiar as Miss Perkins.

"I shall be here all winter," he said, "but I fear I shall see little of you in society, for I shall be very busy. My aunt, Mrs. Walter Delano, and other relatives and friends are urging me to accept invitations, but—"

"Mrs. Delano," exclaimed Miss Perkins, "your aunt?"

"I shall be engaged financing the A., L. and B. railroad, which we are going to build to connect two other roads of our system."

"But Mrs. Delano! I know her very well," again interrupted Miss Perkins. "She is the leader of our set."

The young man pushed on. "It will require some twenty millions to—"

"But I thought you told me you were a civil engineer?"

"I am. My father thought a knowledge of engineering the best equipment for my life work. He is manager of the system and is beginning to throw some of his smaller responsibilities on to my shoulders. This little matter of twenty millions—"

"Are you the son of Edgar T. Dangler, the railroad king?"

"Yes, and my father sets more store by me than most fathers do by their sons, for he has only me to carry on his great work after his death. But pardon me, I'm sure I have kept you nittogether too long for a mere summer acquaintance."

During these developments the beat of Miss Perkins' heart had gone down to something like forty to the minute. She saw the opportunity of a lifetime pass without a possibility of even a clutch. Though Mr. Dangler spoke in a quiet tone, he gave no sign that Miss Perkins could even be to him more than a summer acquaintance. Coldly, but courteously, he left her.

Miss Perkins kept her room for three days and when she reappeared looked as if she had been keel hauled. She had no heart for her winter campaign, and it was a failure. She met Mr. Dangler several times in company during the season, and on one occasion he was presented to her. He did not refer to ever having met her before.

MARY A. BOWEN.

HIS DECISION.

[Copyright, 1908, by American Press Association.]

Critical periods come to all of us in which we are called upon to decide some question vitally important to the rest of our lives.

Theodore Cook was graduated with honor at the scientific school and entered upon his profession of civil engineer with high hopes. He at once found employment as one of the subordinate engineers constructing a system of water supply for a great city. A valley was being dammed, reservoirs constructed and aqueducts built.

Cook rose rapidly. He was not only competent, but ambitious. It was his determination to make his every cent count for his advancement not only in his present position, but through his whole life. Before his graduation at college he had formed the acquaintance of Evelyn Knight, the daughter of a wealthy capitalist, with whom he contemplated marriage. She was as pleasing to him as most of the girls of his acquaintance, and he believed the alliance would be of great advantage to him. The young engineer's prominence among his fellows and in his profession caused Miss Knight to look upon him as a desirable part.

All this was very well, very sensible and very desirable for both parties. When asked by a chum if he was much in love, Cook replied that he did not consider an emotion a fit reason for taking so important a step as marriage; that he was fond of Miss Knight, but was a practical sort of a fellow, and if there was any good reason why he shouldn't marry her he would forebear.

While he was engaged on the water system there was nothing more than a hypothetical understanding between him and the daughter of the capitalist. Notwithstanding his practical nature he came very near doing what he would have considered a very impractical thing. A telephone system was in operation from one end of the water system to the other, and he was thrown off his balance by one of its "hello girls." Madeleine Travers possessed only a fine name. She was not pretty nor stylish nor carefully dressed. She had a pair of large black eyes and an intellectual face, on which was stamped something—call it character or what you will—that impressed itself very sensibly on Cook. Since the central office of the telephone and that of the engineers were in the same building he saw more or less of her. There was a sterling worth in her that showed itself notwithstanding her commonplace vocation that attracted Cook to her. The girl was equally attracted to Cook.

One evening after a conversation with her on other subjects than practical topics Cook went to his room tempted to yield to an emotion and ask Miss Travers to fight the battle of life with him. Indeed, so moved was he that he walked the floor all night, deliberating between her and Miss Knight. The result was in favor of Miss Knight. He wrote her a proposal, and as soon as the work on which he was engaged was finished he married her.

Cook's next professional engagement was as chief engineer on a work owned principally by his capitalist father-in-law. This was a step upward; but he paid a large price for it. In this age of the big fish eating up the little fish how could he fall to be absorbed by the Knight family? He was so absorbed. When his second work was finished the next offered was located several thousand miles away. The Knight family would not consent to his accepting it. Instead they took him to Europe.

The rest of his life was a miserable failure. Within a few years of his marriage his wife inherited a large fortune and used it to make her husband feel uncomfortable. He could not get away from it, and he could not master it. It swallowed him.

One morning after a "scrap" with his wife he took up a paper and saw large headlines announcing that the dam of the water system on which he had found his first employment had given way in the night, the water had swept down the valley, and many people had been borne away in their sleep to an awful death.

But far above the sickening details, like a bell ringing soft and melodious above a storm, was an act of heroic sacrifice. A telephone girl while engaged at her duties got word of the breaking of the dam. She was in the path of the flood and not so far below its advance wave, swallowing trees, houses, cattle, human beings, but that it must soon engulf her. That brief period she spent in calling up such families as she was connected with by wire and was still calling the oft repeated words, "The dam has broken; the flood is coming," when it dashed against the house she was in, leaped over it, and she was whirled away.

That telephone girl was Madeleine Travers.

Cook was still sitting, with the paper before him, when the door opened, and a harsh voice said: "The taxes are due today on my property at B. Here's a check. I wish you to pay them at once. I have a note from the president of the Helping Hand society asking for a subscription for the sufferers of some flood or other. I wonder if these people think I'm here to provide for Tom, Dick and Harry. By the by, as you go by the opera house you'd better pay my subscription for my box for the coming season."

Cook arose, laid aside the paper, took the checks his wife handed him and went out.

He never saw her again.

STEAMER FOUNDERED.

Yarmouth Goes Down in North Sea. It is Believed Crew Perished. By Associated Press. London, Eng., Oct. 29.—Wreckage picked up in the North Sea confirms the fear that the steamer Yarmouth was foundered two days ago while crossing from Hook, Holland, to Harwich. The Yarmouth was a freighter belonging to the Great Eastern railroad. She carried a crew of twenty-three men and it is believed that all perished.

As an author Anthony Trollope received $500,000 during his lifetime.

"All are Meteors With a Different Name."

"We wither from our youth, we gasp away—
Sick, sick— Unfound the boon—unslaked the thirst,
Though to the last, in verge of our decay,
Some phantom lures, such as sought at first—
But all too late—so we are doubly curst.
Love, fame, ambition, avarice—'tis the same,
Each idle, and all ill—and none the worse.
For all are meteors with a different name,
And death the sable smoke where vanishes the flame."

In all probability, for millions of years, the sun has risen to bless us by day and the stars have twinkled through the evening twilight. Each of us, during our short stay, have watched in our own way, the repetition of yesterday. Men have dug and delved, studied and worried; they have searched and theorized on the origin of man. They have polluted and deluted the sacred laws with their poor mortal theory of evolution; the opinions, the theories, the deductions, the figures and the facts are varied entanglements, intricacies and perplexities, based on personal opinions. But as varying, as far apart as they may be as to the origin of humanity, they are all agreed as to our destiny.

The poet Byron understood humanity, as a study of the above extract will show. With each birth a destiny is fixed; a fate is sealed; we may be kings and queens, presidents or leaders of men, or we may be only their subjects. Whatever our station in life, "All are Meteors With a Different Name." But from the first day of our existence, we are all pushed by the ceaseless, unchanging roll of time. "Though to the last," even when we begin to bend under the weight of years "some phantom lures, such as we sought at first." But, alas! Some day, somewhere, our sun of life must sink to rise no more. Each of us, either long or short our lives, have felt the twang of a broken chord, caused by the hand of death. Each has bowed to this immutable law; our heart has been broken (as it were) by the death of loved ones. But, alas! It must be so! We can do nothing but mourn their departure, try to perpetuate them by keeping their names and deeds engraven in the hall of memory, erect at their last resting place some beautiful and lasting memorial. Out of respect, in loving remembrance of father, mother, brother or sister, 'tis the last and only duty we can perform. We would say to you, with all due respect, do your duty and place the order now. Wichita Marble Works, 818 Indiana avenue. 144-61

FUNERAL AT NIGHT IS LATEST IDEE

ALTON PASTOR DECLARES REFORM IN CONDUCT OF FUNERAL RITES MUST COME.

Alton, Ill., Oct. 23.—Funerals at night are the latest idea in Alton. Thirty members of the Ministerial Alliance in session here unanimously endorsed the idea as advanced by Rev. S. Eitel George, pastor of the Henry Street German Methodist church.

"It would be much better to have funerals at night," he said, "and there would be no Sunday funerals, either day or night. Funerals nowadays are too extravagant. Too much money is spent on flowers and carriages, and there is entirely too much display. From an extremely solemn function the funeral has developed into an occasion for vulgar show."

Mr. Eitel George also advocated a radical reform in funeral sermons. The safe thing to do would be to preach a gospel sermon," he said. "I would say nothing good about the deceased unless it were justified by the facts. Even then I would make it very brief."

AN ADVENTURE OF A MISSIONARY.

Copyright, 1908, by American Press Association.

After spending ten years in India as a missionary I returned to America to recuperate from the effects of the Indian climate. Arriving in June, I went on the 1st of July to a region of high altitude in order to get the benefit of a bracing air. I found the change very beneficial. Instead of the hot Indian air I breathed an invigorating atmosphere. From the date of my arrival I gained strength.

At N., not far distant, there was a church, and some of the congregation, hearing that a woman missionary was at our hotel, sent me word that if I would give them some account of my work the next Sunday afternoon they would take up a collection for my mission. I accepted and Sunday morning set out to walk to N. Those who had invited me offered to send for me, but I preferred to walk.

I had made half the distance when I overtook a woman walking in the same direction. I am one of those who take every opportunity to save a soul, so I accosted her. She was fairly well dressed and respectable looking, and after a few remarks about the freshness of the country and the deep blue of the sky I entered on the subject in which I was and am absorbed. To arrest her attention I began by telling her about my life as a missionary. She seemed much interested—indeed, so interested that whenever I attempted to lead her to the subject of her own spiritual condition she would not permit, holding me to what to her was the more attractive subject. Thinking it a good opportunity to rehearse what I intended to say in the afternoon, I did so. When I had finished the woman asked me a number of personal questions, such as my name and whether I had met any of those I was about to address. I told her my name and said I had never seen a single person of the congregation or indeed any one at N. She remarked that she should think I would be embarrassed at speaking to strangers, and I replied that I was a trifle timid in doing so.

As we walked on the woman at a place where the path was narrow fell behind me. Suddenly I felt both my wrists clasped in a firm grip, and before I realized it they were bound together at my back with a handkerchief. My companion, who had done this, then forced me on my back on the ground, both arms being under me, and, tearing my undershirt, she made cords of it and bound my ankles. Having done this, she put me on her shoulder and carried me into a wood so far from the road that I would not be seen, put a gag in my mouth, sat me on a log and, making cords of other parts of my clothing, bound me to a tree growing against it. Then she left me, telling me not to worry, for she would come back to me before sunset the same evening.

There was nothing for me to do but wait. If the woman did not come back I would starve. If I was compelled to stay even one night in the position she had placed me I would surely be a wreck before morning. I wondered what could be her object. Suddenly it occurred to me that I had heard of a large insane asylum in the neighborhood. Might she not be an escaped lunatic? I did not doubt that she was and that she would probably forget all about me. The thought was maddening.

For a time I was not a bodily sufferer, but after awhile sitting in the same position without being able to change became very painful. My watch was in my belt, but I could not see it. I wished that I might in order to know how fast or rather how slowly the time was passing. That the woman had not taken it convinced me that she was not a thief, but insane. There was some comfort in this, for if she was not responsible for her acts her immortal soul was not in peril.

True to her promise, just before sunset she returned to me and asked whether if she unbound me I would go back from whence I came without attempting to injure her. I was glad enough to promise, and, loosening the cords, she helped me on to my feet, gave me her arm and conducted me to the road. We had gone but a short distance when, hearing wheels behind us, she said she would secure me a ride on my again promising not to divulge what she had done. I promised, and she seemed to feel assured that I would keep my word. A farmer in a buggy drove by, and the woman asked him if he would give me a lift. He consented, drove me to within a short distance of my hotel, and I walked the rest of the way, reaching it after all had gone to bed.

The next day I was not in a condition to leave my room. Some ladies in the house were very kind to me, though I needed to be left alone. I was too wrought upon to tell any one of the experience I had passed through and had no desire to punish the woman for what she had done, especially as I considered her demented.

After resting twenty-four hours I awoke refreshed and able to look over my mail, which arrived after breakfast. Among my letters was one from the vestry of the church at N., saying that they had met and passed a vote of thanks for my admirable address on the preceding Sunday.

I was paralyzed with astonishment. As soon as I was able I was driven to N., where I learned that the woman who had bound me had appeared in my stead at the church, delivered my address, taken the largest offering collected in many months and insisted in setting out to walk alone back to my hotel. She was never heard from.

LEITA DOWNING.

Like Father Like Son.
Four-year-old Clyde was a precocious youngster—very talkative and a close observer. He and his father were strolling through the meadows one morning when Clyde observed for the first time some holes in a pond. He waded in and cried out, "Oh, father, what are they?"

"Tailpoles, son," the father replied. "Please, father, let's take them all home with us, then come back and find the mamma and papa, and we'll have the whole family in our pond at home."

The father explained how impossible this would be, and as they walked on a few steps a large, ugly frog hopped across their path. Clyde's father said: "Look, son. Perhaps there is the papa."

Clyde was very thoughtful. He looked at the frog, then at his father, then at himself and exclaimed:

"Well, father, was there ever so much difference between me and you?" —Delineator.

THIS NEWSPAPER AIMS TO RENDER

A PRETTY WOMAN ALWAYS HAS SUITORS

And a good bargain or a good opportunity, always find takers.

When something of real value is advertised—something unusual—you will not be the only one to see the ad., or to investigate the offer.

But, if you are as alert in seeking a bargain, as you were—or are—in affairs of the heart, you will win. In fact, you will win if you have a tenth part of as much determination and enthusiasm in business as in playing your game with Don Cupid.

GIVE US A TRIAL WE CAN PLEASE

REAL SERVICE TO YOU

IF, BY some persistency in giving advice, this newspaper can convince every merchant of the wisdom of telling you all of his store-news that is important—of using enough space in which to do it, and of telling as much of his store-news in every issue as you would be interested in knowing--and--

If, at the risk of over-iteration, this newspaper should convince you that this same store-news is of real, live, palpitating importance to you, as fully worthy of your attention as politics, or base ball, or Crowned Heads, or elopements, murders, riots, fashions or functions of the rich--and--

If it should follow that the merchants should prosper in exact ratio to their energy in advertising and that you should thrive in proportion to your intelligence in spending your income--then this newspaper will feel that it has accomplished so real a public service that this city will be a better place in which to live and to do business

YOU COULDN'T BE FOUND ANY OTHER WAY

So the man concluded to advertise for you. He had hoped you would happen to come around to see him of your own accord—or, that somebody would tell you about what he has to tell you—or, that necessity would drive you to search for him.

But, you didn't come—you didn't "happen" to hear, or to see. His message for you wasn't delivered. His offer—the offer that is really more to your liking and to your interest than any you've had for months--is, at last (as it should have been at first) put into the form of an ad., and awaits you in these columns. You'll know it when you see it—
