CANNED PIG SQUEAL AT LAST.

"We market every part of the hog except the squeal," said the late P. D. Armour to a visitor he was showing about his packing establishment a few years before his death. Had Mr. Armour lived a few years longer he would have heard even the commercial canned squeal of the expiring pig. A short time ago a moving picture and phonograph record concern secured a concession to go into one of the big packing houses in Chicago, where picture films of the slaughtering operations were taken and at the same time records were made of the accompanying sounds.

More Agricultural Colleges.

Fl. Worth Record. Some four years ago The Record proposed a system correlated agricultural colleges to the number of at least four, and has advocated it from time to time with the effect that of late the idea has taken hold upon many men of standing and influence.

In this proposal there is no thought of crippling or rivaling the Agricultural and Mechanical college at College Station. On the contrary, the idea is to make the great institution greater and more useful by relieving it of much undergraduate work and furnishing it with a class of better trained students, and at the same time to accommodate a large number of young men who cannot attend the institution.

There are literally thousands of young men who desire a substantial education in agriculture and animal husbandry. A small proportion of them attend the Agricultural and Mechanical college, but the greater number are unable or unwilling to do so. And of those who attend, only a small proportion persevere to graduation because they are seeking, not a complete scientific or technical course, but only the fundamentals of agriculture.

A subordinate agricultural college a half dozen teachers could accommodate 200 or 300 students of this class, and four such colleges would accommodate 1000 to 1500.

The subordinate college would give to the majority of the students all the education they desire or can afford to take, and the College Station institution would be relieved of all these. Those who wish a complete scientific education could finish their work at the Agricultural and Mechanical college, to which they would go after passing through the subordinate college, thoroughly prepared for the advanced classes.

Thus the Agricultural and Mechanical college would become the finishing school for agricultural students. It would escape a heavy burden now imposed upon it and could do vastly better work in the advanced sciences and expert departments.

This plan does not contemplate any mechanical work in the subordinate colleges, as that would require very expensive equipment, and it would not be in great demand. That work would still be done at College Station.

These subordinate colleges should be located, one in each of the four quarters of Texas, so to speak—one in the black waxy belt of North Texas, one in the pinceries of East Texas, one in the coast region of South Texas and one in the semi-arid section of West Texas.

This geographical distribution would bring the colleges closer to the people, but that is the least of the advantages. Each could adapt its instruction to the peculiar problems of its section, with the main principles of agricultural and animal husbandry in common. An experimental farm attached to each would also bring scientific demonstration closer to the people and would illustrate them in the particular difficulties which surround them.

Each such college and farm would straightway become the center of agricultural information and inspiration for all the region around. Farmers, stockmen and horticulturists would visit them often, would co-operate with them and would directly learn more about applied agriculture than they can possibly gather from bulletins and occasional lectures from public gatherings.

The expense of such a group of colleges will not be so great as to cause hesitation. Fifteen to twenty-five thousand dollars each a year would sustain them, and the State can secure its subscriptions or bonuses from rural towns almost enough for the original buildings.

Such an institution, with its 200 or 300 students is worth $50,000 or more to any ambitious town for it means a trade income of $40,000 to $50,000 a year. There is no reason why the State should not receive such donations in return for the benefit it confers upon a town by the location of such an institution.

Economically-minded statesmen may object to establishing four such institutions in one year, and the prudently minded may prefer to try one or two before going further. Georgia has an agricultural college in each congressional district, and many States have an agricultural high school in each populous agricultural county. Texas might well afford to start with four. It is only a question of time and development when the people will demand more of them. Certainly, four at this time would scarcely meet the demands.

Agricultural education is no longer an experiment, and the real, working farmers of Texas no longer regard it as impractical. Texas farmers are far in advance of Texas statesmen in this respect. They are studying as well as toiling, and they want the State to exert its utmost energies to develop its greatest industry. They know that scientific agriculture pays, and they desire more of it, closer home, for their sons and themselves.

The Supreme Achievement In Clothes For Boys

I S MOST certainly reached in our beautiful assortments for this season. The varieties shown are typical of the Cleverest and most original ideas ever conceived in clothing for little fellows.

The fabrics are all entirely new this season—exclusive effects and modish colorings—and, in fact, the entire line, taking it from every viewpoint, is fully worthy of the Ivan Frank reputation.

THE WHEATFIELD.

Where the Billowing Golden Waves Stretch From Sky to Sky.

Take a look at the wheatfield that has been brought up to perfection as it stands, yellow as gold, with the sheen of the sea, billowing from sky line to sky line like an ocean of gold, where the wind touches the rippling wave crests with the tread of invisible feet. In California, in Oregon, in Washington, in Dakota, in the Canadian northwest, you may ride all day on horseback through the wheatfields without a break in the flow of yellow heavy-headed grain—no fence lines, no meadow lands, no shade trees, no knobs and knolls and hills and hollows of grass or black earth through. From dawn till dark, from sunrise, in a burst of fiery splendor over the prairie horizon, to sundown, when the crimson thing hangs like a huge shield of blood in the haze of a heat twilight, you may ride with naught to break the view between you and the horizon but wheat—wheat. It is like the gold fields. It goes to your head. You grow dizzy looking at it. You rub your eyes. Is it a mirage? The billowing yellow waves seem to be breathing the very sky. You look up. The sky is there all right with the black note of a meadow lark sailing the azure sea. He drops liquid notes of sheer mellow music down on your head, does that meadow lark, and that gives you back your perspective, your sense of amazing reality. You are literally, absolutely, really, in the midst of a sea of living gold. It is you and not the lark that is the note. You begin to feel as if your special note might be a beam that would get lost in infinity if you stayed there long, and so you ride on and on, and some more on, and by and by come out of the league long, fenceless fields with an odor in your nostrils that isn't exactly like incense—it's too fugitive, too fine, too subliminal of earth. It is aromatic, a sort of odor of roses, the imprisoned fragrance of the billions upon billions of wheat flowers shut up in the glumes of the heavy-headed grain there. And that's the odor of the wheat—Agnes C. Laut in Outing Magazine.

Uncle (who left his nephew "refreshing")—Well, Tommy, you see I'm back. Are you ready? What have I to pay, miss? Waitress—Three buns, four sponge cakes, two sandwiches, one jelly, five tarts and—Uncle—Good gracious, boy! Are you not ill? Tommy—No, uncle, but I'm very thirsty.—London Tit-Bits.

B. D. Donnell, City Editor Entered at the Postoffice at Wichita Falls as second-class mail matter. High School Honor Roll.

Wichita Falls, Texas, Nov. 14th, 1908.

The New York World says that the phrase, "Taking Advice from Toddy," can be abbreviated this way: T-A-F-T.

"A man is not without honor save in his own country." According to the tally sheets not a single vote was cast for Eugene Debs in his home county, though Mr. Debs makes affidavit that both he and his brother cast ballots on election day.

While we are thinking about exorbitant railway rates, it may be well to remember that, owing to bad roads, that cost of hauling farm products from the fields to the shipping points is fully three times as great as the railway transportation per ton mile. On some roads it is much more.

The Emperor of China is keeping the Associated Press guessing. Yesterday his death was bulletined two or three times and the same thing has happened again today. It is the only time he has ever been brought prominently before the public and therefore can be excused for not dying on schedule time.

With movements on foot to secure a hospital, organize an interstate fair and build two more railroads, the Wichita Falls Chamber of Commerce will be kept quite busy this winter. Even with those prospects on hand and with the details not yet worked out, the busy people of Wichita Falls can still find time to go after anything that looks good for the general welfare and advancement of the town.

Governor Folk of Missouri says his opponent, "Gum Shoe Bill" Stone, defeated him for the senatorial nomination by working a trick. Perhaps so, but it must be remembered that when Governor Folk was elected governor of Missouri the State not only gave its electoral vote to the republican candidate for president, but also elected a legislature which was republican, which retired Senator Cockrell and elected a republican in his stead. That also looked like Folk had played a trick and if he did not succeed this time he should not grumble too much.

The republicans elected three of the five congressmen from Oklahoma at the recent election, while the State gave its electoral vote to Bryan by a large majority. The reason for this kind of a result is due to the manner in which the congressional districts were laid off before Oklahoma became a State, and while the republicans or Federal authorities were in charge, and cut out three districts that are almost sure to return republican majorities until the State is redistricted. When this is done, the democratic party's time to do a little gerrymandering of the districts, and if handled properly all five of the districts can be made strongly democratic.

The giving of cash bonuses for cotton brought to market in Wichita Falls is helping to make this city a leading market in this section. So far as it goes, the bonus is all right, but the Times believes still better results can be attained next season if the Chamber of Commerce will raise a fund for cash prizes for the best products—corn and other crops, as well as cotton, to be awarded next fall. If such prizes were advertised now the farmers of the Wichita country would be more careful in the selection of their seed and in the cultivation of their crops, and therefore would harvest larger yields of better quality. This suggestion is offered for what it is worth.

Wichita Falls is undoubtedly one of the coming cities of the State. They have a way of going after what they want and getting what they go after. They set an example we would do well to follow.—Archer City Dispatch.

There is no telling how much a town can do for itself until it tries. The people of Wichita Falls were idle for many years, during which time her population dropped to less than half what it was, her streets went to the bad and everything seemed to be going wrong. Finally her business men got together—that was three or four years ago, and have worked together ever since that time. The results show for themselves. Now we have everything her business men went after, and the work of making Wichita Falls a city—one of the coming cities of the State—has got a good start and there is nothing that can stop her. In 1910 she expects to be in the 15,000 population class and maybe more.

ESSENTIAL FACTS ABOUT TUBERCULOSIS.

The Texas Anti-Tuberculosis Association has issued a bulletin giving in concise form the essential facts about tuberculosis. This bulletin gives the following information:

The Extent of the Disease. Throughout the civilized world two persons die of consumption every minute, 150,000 dying in the United States annually.

With statistics at hand, it is estimated that 483 per month, 5800 per annum, or 12 per cent of all deaths that occur in Texas, are due to consumption.

Tuberculosis causes more deaths in the State of Texas than all other communicable diseases combined.

Valuing a human life at the low figure of $5,000, this disease costs the State of Texas $29,000,000 annually—equaling the Standard Oil fine.

The Nature of the Disease. Tuberculosis is an infectious disease.

One inherits a fertile soil—a predisposition, but not the disease.

The germ may live outside the human body in a warm, moist, dark place for a long time.

Under favorable circumstances the germ grows and multiplies rapidly, causing thereby the illness and finally the death of the man or animal in which it grows.

Placed under certain conditions, where it can no longer grow, the germ becomes like a grain of wheat, simply a seed, capable of waiting indefinitely, until conditions arise, for it to take on fresh growth.

How Tuberculosis is Spread. The great medium for the spread of the disease is the consumptive's spit or cough. In the form of dust, the germ is breathed into the lungs.

A house in which the consumptive has lived is dangerous, unless thoroughly disinfected, renovated and cleaned.

In the cracks and crevices of the floors, walls and furniture, in the hanging curtains and in the bedding, the germ protected from the sunlight can live for years.

Excessive work, insufficient or indigestible food, or the steady drinking of alcoholic liquors lowers the vitality and renders one more susceptible to the disease.

Through the milk or the meat of diseased animals tuberculosis is also transmissible to man.

The Prevention of Tuberculosis. An infectious disease is always a preventable disease.

The cardinal principles to be observed in the sick room are cleanliness, sunlight, fresh air, and care of the sputum (disinfection).

Never spit except into a receptacle which can be burned or boiled, or into a spittoon which contains a disinfectant solution.

Floors should be bare, covered with linoleum, with wash cotton rugs, or light rugs that can be exposed frequently to the sunlight.

Sun all bedding, upholstered and non-washable material frequently; boil all linen and washable material; use wet sawdust in sweeping, damp cloths in dusting and scour the floors weekly.

The apartments should be disinfected every thirty to ninety days with formaldehyde gas, which purifies the room, as sunlight does the bedding.

Flies, mosquitoes or other insects should not be allowed in the house, as they carry the germs of the disease.

Cities should provide ordinances for notification and registration of cases; for disinfection on removal or death; for the prevention of promiscuous spitting, and for the cleaning of streets by flushing.

The Cure of Tuberculosis.

Tuberculosis is curable in a majority of cases, if taken in time.

To nail one's bedroom window shut is to drive a nail into one's coffin.

Building up the general health increases the resistance to the disease; more than any other disease the outcome of a case is in the hands of the patient.

Medical experience has demonstrated that we can overcome the adverse chances of nature and circumstances if we correct our personal errors of hygiene.

The cure is, fresh air and sunshine, rest, and an abundance of plain, nourishing food.

Change in climate is not essential and the aimless drifting of the average consumptive should be discouraged.

Frequent disinfection with formaldehyde prevents one's being re-inoculated with their own disease.

Upon application to the State Association, publications on information about consumption, and about sleeping porches and facilities for outdoor sleeping can be obtained.

SERVICE IN THE CABINET.

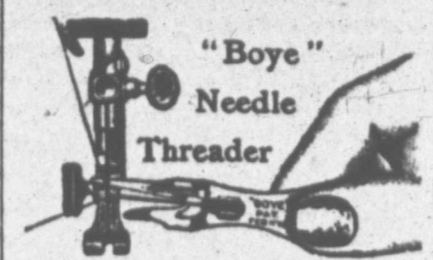

The Custom of Our Presidents in the Republic's Early Days.
 If President John Adams had been a man of different temperament the custom might have been established in the early years of the government of the United States of retaining the cabinet of one administration for service with its successor where that successor succeeded to the political ideas of its predecessor. President Adams sought at first to retain through his administration the members of the cabinet of President Washington. Indeed, at that early period the status of a cabinet officer was not exactly that of the present time, and in the course of President Adams' rows with the members of his official household he resorted to the strange step of removing his secretary of state, Timothy Pickens, and James McHenry, his secretary of war.
 President Jefferson of course took a new cabinet. President Madison continued in his administration a number of the cabinet officers of President Jefferson, and President Monroe held some of his predecessor's. John Quincy Adams also continued to meet about his council board some of the advisers of James Monroe, but Andrew Jackson began his administration with an entirely new set of official counselors. He maintained also another set of advisers, unofficial, who became known as the "kitchen cabinet."
 For some time the gentlemen who had acted respectively as secretary of the treasury, secretary of war, secretary of the navy, postmaster general and attorney general in the cabinet of President Jackson retained their seats under President Van Buren, but changes only awaited the passage of time.
 President William Henry Harrison's cabinet was brand new, and John Tyler sought to keep it together after Harrison's death, but in less than six months all had resigned except Daniel Webster, the secretary of state. Presidents Polk, Taylor, Fillmore, Pierce, Buchanan and Lincoln each formed a new cabinet.
 President Johnson's difficulties with certain members of the cabinet that existed at the death of President Lincoln are well known. Since that period, when for the second time in American history the question of a cabinet officer's right to retain a seat which the president wishes to have vacated came up for angry controversy, cabinets by mutual but tacit understanding end with the administrations... Boston Globe.

"I don't like that judge," said the smooth crook; "his speech is so jerky."
 "I would say," remarked the Boston burglar, "that, though they are unorthodox, I rather like his short sentences."—Baltimore American.

REAL SERVICE TO YOU

IF, BY some persistency in giving advice, this newspaper can convince every merchant of the wisdom of telling you all of his store-news that is important—of using enough space in which to do it, and of telling as much of his store-news in every issue as you would be interested in knowing--and--
 If, at the risk of over-iteration, this newspaper should convince you that this same store-news is of real, live, palpitating importance to you, as fully worthy of your attention as politics, or base ball, or Crowned Heads, or elopements, murders, riots, fashions or functions of the rich--and--
 If it should follow that the merchants should prosper in exact ratio to their energy in advertising and that you should thrive in proportion to your intelligence in spending your income--then this newspaper will feel that it has accomplished so real a public service that this city will be a better place in which to live and to do business.

YOU COULDN'T BE FOUND ANY OTHER WAY

So the man concluded to advertise for you. He had hoped you would happen to come around to see him of your own accord—or, that somebody would tell you about what he has to tell you—or, that necessity would drive you to search for him.
 But, you didn't come—you didn't "happen" to hear, or to see. His message for you wasn't delivered! His offer—the offer that is really more to your liking and to your interest than any you've had for months—is, at last (as it should have been at first) put into the form of an ad., and awaits you in these columns. Fraternal Bankers Enjoy a Smoker.

Last night a large number of members of the Fraternal Bankers gathered at their hall, 713 Ohio avenue, and enjoyed a luncheon and smoker and a general good time, was had. The local lodge is growing rapidly and the officers are untiring in advancing the local lodge. They are working for the locating of the grand lodge headquarters here. A number of good speeches helped to enthuse the members.

New Century Club.

Miss Dora Coons had a grate piled high with a black combustible that sputtered and glowed with tales of long ago. Eldin spirits played and danced mid the laurel bloom that had ripened in the bosom of Mother Earth, that was today lending to the New Century Club women such genial warmth. While we hovered near the embers and listened to the stories told in graceful rhythm of Tennyson, Byron and Milton, we felt our bosoms swell with the glad knowledge that those great men still lived in so rich an inheritance left to us, that would never fade away.

As the sparkling coffee and sandwiches vanished we drew near unto each other in that instructive way—that way that is born only in the heart of woman to feel to give to receive, remaining till the shadows lengthened, reminding us that home was calling. So we covered the embers and put out the light, feeling that the next meeting was waiting with a richness just as inviting as the one we had so thoroughly enjoyed. A MEMBER.

Card of Thanks.

We, the Crowell children, wish to thank our many friends who were so kind and sympathizing with us in the loss of our dear mother. May the Lord bless you all in the prayer of her MOTHER, SISTER and CHILDREN.

A Word Breaker.

"Fine looking old gentleman."
"Yes, but he was never known to give a man his word that he did not break it."
"Dishonest, eh?"
"Nope; he stutters."—Houston Post.

Dignity and Ignorance.

"So you have decided to call in another doctor?"
"I have," was the reply. "The absurdity of the man prescribing linseed tea and mustard plasters for people of our position!"

"AS HOT AS YOU WANT IT"

is how to make our "hot soda." The colder the day the hotter we make it. Temperature has a lot to do with making "hot soda" right. Some do not know how to do this, but we do.

HOT SODA AT THIS TIME

is just the thing. It's ready to draw whenever you call. Call and bring a friend and both of you make yourselves at home while taking a "hot soda."

port rang through the court room.

Stands Pistol in Hand.
For a moment everybody seemed stunned. The discarded juror, whose revolver was within a foot and a half of Heney's head when he pulled the trigger, stepped back, his arm by his side, one hand clutching the smoking pistol as if he hesitated what to do. For a fraction of a second silence followed the report, while the smoke of the shot lazily floated away. Then followed a dramatic scene. Some one shouted:

"My God, he has shot Heney."

Stampede in Court Room.

A chorus of moans escaped the crowd. Half the people, every one fearing further shooting, made a frantic rush for the doors. Before Haas could raise his pistol again Foley and E. J. Wisketchill, a special policeman, were upon him, threw him to the floor and wrested the weapon from his hand. He struggled hard, but was dragged to the jury box, and thrown on his back and held there, just as the jury, attracted by the shot, came bursting through their private entrance.

Asks For His Wife.

Mr. Heney arose from his chair, put his hand to his head, the blood streaming through his fingers and reddening the table in front of him, leaned over a moment and was caught as he began to fall. He was placed on the floor. Charles Oliver and John Foley, two special detectives connected with the district attorney's office, holding his head out of the pool of blood which flowed from a hole which appeared to be just below his right temple. He was conscious and when the Associated Press representative stepped down by his side and spoke to him his first words were:

"Send for my wife."

Why He Barked.

A witness in an Irish court talked so loud that Charles Phillips, who was counsel on the other side, said, "Fellgw, why do you bark so furiously?"
"Because," said the man, looking hard at Phillips, "I think I see a tblef!"

For a Bride's Dowry.

There is a very pretty custom in some of the northern parts of Europe. There the white poplar in good soil increases a shilling in value every year. The trees are generally cut down at the age of twenty years, as they are then supposed to have attained their full growth. When a daughter is born in the family of a well to do farmer the father as soon as the season permits plants a thousand young trees, and these are to constitute the dowry of the maiden, "which grow as she grows and increases in height and value as her virtues and beauty increase."

Out to Work.

"What society needs is a clearing house."
"What do you mean?"
"I wish I didn't have to go to the Van Squawks' ball next week. The Van Squawks wish they didn't have to ask me. Why can't we exchange certificates and call the thing even?"
