FUGITIVE SPAR BUOYS

Rescuing These Stray "Sticks" Is Perilous Work.

SIGNBOARDS OF CHANNELS.

How These Mariners' Guides Are Anchored and How They Sometimes Break Away and Are Hunted Down by the Lighthouse Service Tenders.

When the winter gales begin to blow, the tenders of the lighthouse service turn their sterns toward northern seas to hunt stray spar buoys. Of all the work of the coast patrol this, perhaps, is the most exposed to danger. Pulling these "signboards" out of the sea or putting them over side is like "yanking" spiles with a ton derrick on a heaving platform.

Although passengers in the boats that ply the waters of New York harbor, Long Island sound and other waterways along the coast see many spar buoys, they give them little thought. With the man at the wheel it is different. Color, shape and size give him volumes of information, and he looks upon the spar buoy as an invaluable guide.

In the government inventories they are listed as "sticks," although they are sometimes sixty feet long. They are anchored in the bed of a river or harbor channel, their "up ends" painted in such a way as to indicate to the observer the formation of the bottom. On the margin of government charts explanatory notes tell one that vessels approaching a harbor from the sea should leave red buoys with even numbers on the right and black, with odd numbers on the left side of channels. Black and white striped buoys, the stripes running perpendicularly, mean an obstruction in the channel, with room to get by on either side. If balls or cages ornament the "up ends" it means a turning point, the color and number indicating the course.

These sticks are put down with heavy iron anchors and sometimes great stone weights. One would suppose that so fixed they never could get away, but they do, and it is a job to find them. Ice floes break their cables and sometimes crush the sticks; storms pull them loose, and ships in the fog or darkness foul them and tear them from their hold on the bottom. Not infrequently ships use them as moorings, although this is forbidden.

There are instances where the anchors of a spar buoy have been secure enough to hold against ice pressure and in a narrow channel cause a dangerous jam. But such cases are few, for when this happens the weight of the ice usually becomes so great as to force the buoy under, and the pack slides on.

If the ice pack gets under the buoy so as to lift it there is only one result—the parting of the cable. Then off starts the spar upon a journey maybe of thousands of miles, perhaps of only one or two. It may fetch up on the nearest shore, and it may drift to the coast of Europe or into the southern seas. On the Irish coast today is one which traveled there in six weeks from New York harbor. It was presented to the British government by the United States and now floats off the coast on which it stopped after its long Atlantic journey.

If it is a long chase to find the stray buoys it is even a more difficult task to recover the anchors left behind by the fugitive spars. Tenders that sail out of the harbor have a derrick and tackle rigged in front of the pilot house, with a donkey engine to lift and pull. The location of every buoy is marked on the charts to a degree, so it is not difficult to find the desired position. The serious business is dragging for the anchor and after grappling with it to hoist it aboard ship. Here the donkey engine comes into play. Another hazard is to pull a spar buoy aboard. If a sea happens to be running the captain of the tender has to use extreme care. Should a big roller get under him and suddenly tighten the lifting chains either they would give way or the weight would come up too fast, the crew in either case being placed in jeopardy of their lives.

But the risk these men run is all in the day's work. To them a job in a seaway on a lee shore is regarded as no more monotonous task than repainting a row of buoys on land.—New York Post.

The Brevity of Ballarat.

It was in Ballarat that Mark Twain found the local language so puzzling at first, the good people of the place deeming life too short to dawdle in their talk.

The mayor called on the American humorist and laconically said—"K'm." Then when Mark Twain gave him a cigar he simply said "Q."

Subsequent inquiry revealed that these terms were Ballaratese for "welcome" and "thank you."—London Chronicle.

Hailed.

"Does that young woman hail from Boston?"

"Yes," answered the western youth thoughtfully, "that expresses the ideas precisely. She hails from Boston. I was never before overtaken by such a heavy downfall of intellectual ice."

Not Greatly Disguised.

It may be a blessing in disguise, to quote Jay Cook's estimate of the National debt, that has come to Texas with the boll weevil. The Department of Agriculture now reports its estimate of the Texas corn crop of 1908 at over 100 millions of bushels, which will be the largest year's production in the history of the State, and an increase over 1907 of some 16 millions of bushels. A special feature of the crop is at a comparatively high yield, has been secured, the average being at most 26 bushels per acre, against 21 bushels last year and a ten-year average of 19 1/2 bushels.

These data now place Texas fifth in rank as a corn-producing State, it having gone by Kansas, Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, and it is suggested that within ten years more it will be probably the largest corn-producing State in the Union.

Texas is an empire within itself, and we are not surprised at these enormous results in corn production, and especially so as the boll weevil has done so much to hurt cotton culture there. Texas for many years has been the great cotton and cattle State, and now is about to add corn to its list of staple crops.—Louisiana, Planters' and Sugar Manufacturers.

ROYAL STRONG ARMS

Famous Monarchs That Rivalled the Mighty Samson.

AMAZING FEATS OF MUSCLE.

The Emperor Maximilian Could Lift Three Men With One Hand—Augustus the Strong of Saxony Carried a Horse and Its Rider on His Back.

Curiously enough, a large percentage of the notably strong men of history have been of royal blood. One of the earliest of these royal athletes was Maximilian, called "Maximilian Hercules" because of his great strength. He was the son of a peasant and had an enormous physique. He became a common soldier and was finally made emperor by acclaim of his fellow soldiers during a stormy period of Roman history.

Maximilian's strength was prodigious. It was said that on foot he could pin down a fox, that he could lift three men with one hand and that by gripping the wheel of a chariot with one finger he could resist the pull of three horses. Like most men of great physical strength, Maximilian was a heavy eater. History records that his daily allowance was forty pounds of meat and eighteen bottles of wine.

Augustus the Strong of Saxony was another of these royal Samsons. He would often seize two of his courtiers, grasping one with his right hand and another with his left, holding them up at arm's length and playfully twirling them about.

On one occasion the horse ridden by one of his attendants became balky and refused to budge. After some minutes of coaxing the king dismounted, placed his Herculean shoulder under the horse's chest, grasping it by the forelegs, and calmly walked away with both horse and rider. This remarkable performance was witnessed by a number of courtiers and attendants.

King Richard of England ("Coeur de Lion") had tremendous strength. During his captivity in Germany he gave a terrible demonstration of his physical powers. The son of one of the wardens was a youth locally renowned for his muscular strength and in his assurance invited the royal captive to an exchange of buffets. The young man by a cast of the dice won the right to the first stroke and struck the king a staggering blow on the side of the head. It was then the king's turn, and he landed a blow just behind his opponent's ear so heavy that the man was instantly killed.

This incident is used in Sir Walter Scott's famous historical novel "Ivanhoe," where King Richard, the "Black Knight," and the jolly outlaw Friar Tuck have an exchange of buffets, without, however, any fatal result.

Dom Pedro I, emperor of Brazil, is also on the list of royal strong men. On the occasion of a carnival he arranged matters so that he was standing on the bow of the royal barge between two of his stately courtiers. Suddenly in the midst of the festivities the king reached out, grasped a courtier with each hand, and, after holding them for a few moments spiraling in the air and begging to be released, he relaxed his grip and allowed them to drop plump into the water, amid the frantic applause of the huge crowd that had assembled to view their monarch. The king joined heartily in the general hilarity, but what the drenched courtiers thought about this exquisite joke is not recorded.

Peter the Great of Russia, like Charlemagne, possessed great physical as well as mental power. His years of work as blacksmith and ship carpenter had so developed a naturally powerful physique that he was believed to be the strongest man in Russia.

The story is told that a certain blacksmith in a little country town had boasted that he was the only blacksmith in the world who could lift his own anvil. The emperor, hearing of the blacksmith's boast, disguised himself as a workman and with a single companion set out for the blacksmith's village. On learning of their errand the blacksmith, without a word laid aside his tools and, grasping the anvil with his brawny hands, lifted it with great effort about a foot from the floor. Then Peter took hold of the anvil, raised it a foot, two feet, three, higher and higher, till he finally swung it to his shoulder and calmly walked away with it.

Charlemagne was said to be the most powerful man physically of his time. One of his favorite feats of strength was to break the heaviest horseshoe by gripping it with one hand.

A worthy successor of Peter the Great was the late Czar Alexander III, who was one of the strongest men in the world. He was often called "the Russian Samson." The czar's regular playing card was a Russian coin somewhat larger than our silver quarter, which he would bend almost double with his powerful fingers.

Alexander was also fond of breaking horseshoes, and it is said he never found one he could not break in two. He could take two fresh packs of cards and by gripping the ends with his hands tear them straight down through the middle.

It is said that on one occasion a woman companion expressed a wish for a bouquet holder in which to place a large bunch of roses. The czar took a pewter tankard from a table nearby and with a few movements of his powerful hands fashioned it into a rough but picturesque and quite efficient bouquet holder.—W. B. C. Latson in New York Tribune.

Wichita Falls, Texas, Jan. 5th, 1909.

After today there are only twenty-two more days remaining in which one may qualify to vote by paying the requisite State, county and city poll taxes. Saturday, January 30th, the collectors' offices will close, and if you have not paid by that time, you will not be able to vote in this year's elections.

In addition to the municipal elections that may take place during the year, there may be during the summer an election to decide if the State is to continue the present local option policy or substitute for it constitutional prohibition.

No citizen of this State should neglect to qualify to vote, in the face of such an issue. If the question is submitted it ought not to be decided by one-third of the potential voters of the State, but by the full strength of the State citizenship.

When the progressive business men of Wichita Falls got together in the annual Chamber of Commerce banquets at the beginning of each New Year, they strike the note and sound the slogan for the year's progress. Tonight's banquet promises to be the most enthusiastic and largely attended ever held and will afford a splendid opportunity to see the workings of the Wichita Falls spirit, a spirit that has placed Wichita Falls in the front rank of the progressive communities of the Southwest.

The city public schools reopened yesterday after a two weeks holiday vacation, and the enrollment was above eleven hundred, which is a gain of over one hundred since the last report of the superintendent. This is given as another evidence of the substantial growth of Wichita Falls.

The annual meeting of the Wichita Falls Chamber of Commerce will be called tonight at the Elks' Hall in the City National Bank building, at 8 o'clock. Following the business meeting the banquet will be served in the dining room at the St. James.

FIRES AND INSURANCE

What Being Burned Out May Mean to a Business.

DAMAGE ONE CANNOT COVER.

Enormous Losses Caused by the Suspension of Operations and the Drifting Away of Trade That Are Not Appreciated by the General Public.

"I suppose you heard that Blank & Co. were burned out from the roof to the basement last night?" remarks the man in the car.

"No," exclaims the friend who hasn't seen the morning paper. "I suppose they carried insurance?"

"Oh, yes—a hundred thousand of it" returns the first speaker, at which his friend settles back with the comment that everything is all right then.

This is the layman's conclusion almost invariably. Some big concern burns out, but with insurance to an amount seeming to cover the loss the average man is disposed to feel that it is all right. He doesn't stop to think of the enormous risks of a business which cannot be covered by insurance and which for weeks, months or years after a fire are crippling and perhaps ruinous to the fire victim.

Take, for example, a highly organized factory plant in prosperous times which has been turning out a vast specialized product from the hands of thousands of expert workmen. This plant, fitted with costly machinery, is covered by insurance upon its visible, material assets. Fire sweeps it and lays everything in hopeless ruin. If every piece of machinery, every building and all material adjuncts of the plant, have been covered to full value in such a plant, will the reader dare make a rough guess as to what the limitations of loss may be?

Only the other day I stepped into a bookbindery, unostentatious in first street signs and occupying a fifth floor in an obscure street. In the elevator shaft was that peculiar odor which marks the track of fire and firemen days and weeks after such an accident.

"Most of the fire was next door," explained the proprietor, "but I guess the smoke and the water were about as bad for us. Sometimes it is almost better to have the fire yourself than be next door to it."

Which seemed to be especially true of book material. Where smoke and soot had failed to blot and ruin the stock, water from the engines in the street had flooded it until ruin alone was descriptive. Everything had been closed down; workers in the plant were idle, and the proprietor was awaiting the adjustment of the insurance which he had been carrying. But in the extent of this insurance itself was a knotty situation.

Ordinarily the house had carried policies which would have left it the minimum of risk on its machinery, stock and materials. Ordinarily a still further blanket policy was carried for the purpose of covering the normal amount of book material on hand owned by others and contracted for rebinding. But only a few days before the fire the house had received a consignment of $5,000 worth of large books to be bound. These volumes, aside from intrinsic value, represented so much of other value as to make the risk abnormal for almost any season. And these books were ruined.

Before receding them the binder had asked the owners to take out a policy for themselves protecting them against such fire loss. The firm had not done so, and when the fire damage came the disposition of the owners was to hold the binder for them under one of the binder's blanket policies.

On this one disputed point, taking it into court, will some one make a guess as to what this one feature of the fire may cost the binder, who to all purposes was "insured," if it should be settled in the supreme court after five or seven years, for example?

But in the case of the big manufactory, with its imported special machinery, its season of rush work and its enormous and fluctuating stock of material—if on the morning after the fire the assuring companies settle in full for the visible losses, how much has the company been damaged?

Of first consideration, perhaps, is the enormous payroll of the concern. If most of the mechanical work of the plant has been done by pieceworkers, still the necessary force of directing employees on salary is a problem. The determination of the owners is to start up anew. Tried and proved employees must be retained while the work of rehabilitation goes on. They must be paid even if they are to do no more than wait. Settlement of some kind must be made with contractors who have been supplying raw materials from the hands of other thousands of workers. No matter what the clauses in contracts providing immunity in case of fires, strikes and acts of Providence, every line of business affecting the welfare of the manufactory has been affected.

The plant is a total loss. Before it can be rebuilt the ruins of the old factory must be cleared away.

In the meantime all those customers of the manufactory who have been pressing for the filling of contract orders find themselves shut out of any chance for receiving them. They turn at once to other competing establishments for the work. Not only does the burned out firm lose all chance of profits from this work, but it is running a long chance of losing some of its oldest and best customers of years standing. (Chicago Tribune.)

In the Great American Desert.

In the old geographies, and not so very old either, you will find a "Great American Desert" marked off, lying partly in Texas and partly in New Mexico. This great waste of sand and "wind-swept desert" covered a section of country as large as most of the Eastern States, being 250 miles long, running north and south, and 130 miles wide from east to west. But little was known of this "desert," and what little the books told of it was of a very discouraging nature. It was painted as practically barren, waterless and treeless, and almost devoid of all vegetation by the fierce hot winds of summer and the unmerciful howlers of winter. Some of the writers even hinted at a lot of almost supernatural things that would happen to the curious visitor, who, mile-haunted, would likely wander to his death amid a scene of desolation so weird, uncanny and frightful as to make a Dantean picture look sweet and pleasant. Well, we are making different geographies now. Several railway lines run through the heart of this one-time desert, and the towns that are springing up, surrounded by every evidence of prosperity, and with granaries overflowing from big crops wherever the "man with the hoe" has been in evidence, these old-time geographies would be amusing reading matter. Dimmitt and Hereford are both towns in the "desert," Hereford being the county seat of Deaf Smith county and Dimmitt the county seat of Castro county. A recent number of the Dimmitt Plainsman said: "A wagon loaded with 3000 fruit trees from the Hereford nurseries passed through Dimmitt yesterday for Nazareth, where they will be planted in a community that is considered the best farming land in Texas, and they are in the good old county of Castro. No place is complete without plenty of fruit and shade trees. It is hoped by the Plains men that every land owner in Castro county will join the procession of tree planting to be held in the best county in the Lone Star State." And this is the heart of the "Great American Desert"—Texas "Trad. Rev. Ed.

OVER THE WISHBONE

CHRISTMAS has come and gone and the New Year is here. We made a resolution last year which was to this effect. To make our goods and services so valuable that the housekeepers who patronized our store would not only become customers of ours but would tell others.

While we did not make this resolution known generally we have kept it perfectly and our new store is the result. To say we are greatly pleased is putting it mildly and in appreciation of the reception our efforts have met we are going to make that resolution public this year, and improve our service in general whenever possible.

We want you to do us the favor of reporting any mistakes that may creep into our services. We do make mistakes although they are never intentional and we are always anxious to rectify them when we know about them. AMUSEMENTS

"The Woman's Hour."

Listen to advice and see Adelaide Thurston in "The Woman's Hour." Delightful, charming, lovable as she has been in times past, shy never seemed to have quite found herself until in her present vehicle. We have seen her as Lois in "Sweet Clover," and other quite similar ingenue roles in which she has been effish, half sick, half woman, and always with tears or laughter kept herself very close to the hearts of us all, but now that she comes playing the role of a mature woman, with all a woman's strength and weakness, hopes and doubts, and with a woman's great and abiding love, one must realize that never before has she given a portrayal which even nearly measures her capabilities.

In "The Woman's Hour," written by her leading man, Frederick Paulding, she appears as Hester Temple, an heiress from the West, an heiress who at 25 years of age, with a college education and European travel and finishing complete, finds herself fatherless and altogether alone in the world. In the Berkshire hills a pensioner on the bounty of her nephew, Roger Daneway, is Hester's aunt, Mrs. Augusta Revelton-Carter, who suddenly discovers Hester and her millions, and asks her to Mount Atry, representing that the country house is hers. Daneway, eccentric bachelor, with a distaste for women in general, is not consulted, since Mrs. Carter's plan is to marry her son Beverly to Hester, the money being the motive. Daneway refuses to meet Hester, then all by accident does so. Embarrassing situations follow, because of Mrs. Carter's duplicity. But when the seas calm down and everybody gets well set to catch only friendly breezes it develops that Hester and Daneway are in love with each other. Mrs. Carter's son must be considered, as must Mrs. Allice Girard, widow, who has loved Daneway always.

There is plenty of work to be done and everybody gets busy. They tell Daneway that Hester is in love with Donald Foxall, his ward, and they tell Hester that Daneway is engaged to be married to Mrs. Girard.

Did you ever know those things to work out? Well, they don't in this case.

But matters are seriously complicated by a crash in Wall street, and it is Hester's money that saves Daneway through his manager, Johnathan Creaddle. The source of the money is unknown to Daneway, and aided and abetted by Mrs. Carter and her son, Mrs. Girard says she sent the money. But Creaddle knows, despite the anonymous note accompanying the money and when the light of life has gone out for both Hester and Daneway, Creaddle touches the match to the candle wick once more.

It is a delectable little story and one which gives Miss Thurston opportunities to use to a greater extent than ever before both sense and repressed emotions. She coquettes fascinatingly; she fights like a tiger; she is proud and humble, but always lovable because always so intensely feminine.

It has always been her rare fortune to possess a voice of peculiar timbre and wonderful appeal and she has ample opportunities for using it in all its shadings.

And one is wearing such stunning crowns—long, clinging, silky things of beautiful coloring—and wearing them with such distinction that one marvels that this can be the little Adelaide Thurston who last season and the season before distressed us, though we loved her in her old breeches and "sou-wester" cap! And polished and graceful! To see Adelaide Thurston mix a whiskey punch is enough to cause a tremor to the foundations of the faith of the strongest prohibitionist alive. From first to last her work is studious, delicate and artistic.

Frederick Paulding has written the play in excellent style. There are fragments in it which stay in one's mind. Regarding the story of Adam's rib, Hester observes that if the story be true woman was made out of the only rib which man could have had strength to stand alone.

Also, Maggie, the maid, observes, concerning women's pride in their love affairs: "Well, course I ain't a lady, but if pride makes ladies let mouss-colored blondes take their sweethearts away from em, keep me common."

Incidentally, it would be hard to find a stronger bit of character work than the Maggie Farley of Miss Caroline Newcomb.

Miss Thurston's support are all capable players, Frederick Paulding playing Daneway, Miss Clara Sildon appearing as Mrs. Carter, Frank Dawson as Jonathan Creaddle, Baker Moore as Donald Foxall and Miss Pauline Eckhart as Mrs. Girard.

Altogether, "The Woman's Hour" gives two and one-half hours of very excellent entertainment and will be at the Byers again this afternoon and to night.

For good pies, use Eupson's pumpkin. King & White have it. 178-4f

The Conover Piano

CHICAGO. Gentlemen: After having used the Conover Piano for a year in all departments of the Chicago Conservatory, I wish to express to you my great satisfaction with them.

During the last fifteen years I have used almost every first class piano on the market and I can say without hesitation that the Conover has given better satisfaction than any other piano used. Its tone is sweet and strong; the touch is elastic and the action superb. In short, there is nothing about the Conover Piano I would change, and I hereby give it my unqualified endorsement.

Sincerely yours,
W. W. HUNSHAW, Pres.
Chicago Conservatory, Auditorium Building.

SYRACUSE, N. Y. Gentlemen—The Conover Parlor Grand for our College of Fine Arts arrived a few days ago, and it more than meets my highest expectations. It is pronounced by all who have tried it a superb instrument, and you are to be congratulated upon this product of your skill and inventive genius. I would also add that the Conover Upright Pianos, ordered for our college last summer give the best satisfaction, and stand the severe demands made upon them remarkably well.

Yours very truly,
Geo. A. PARKER,
Professor of Piano and Organ, Syracuse University.

The Fare.

This is how a driver of the prison van, known as Black Maria, distinguished himself. A would be wit on the causeway halted him.

"Got any room inside, Robert?"

"There's room for one," replied the driver. "We kept it for you."

Not entirely disconcerted, the wit made another shot.

"What's your fare?" he asked.

The answer entirely extinguished him.

The famous Coliseum, in old Rome, massive as it was, was a mere toy in comparison with the great arenas, which filled the valley between the Palatine and the Aventine hills. The Coliseum is said to have been able to seat 80,000 people, while the seating capacity of the great arenas was, at different periods, 150,000, 250,000 and, lastly, 380,000 spectators. The great arena was probably the most stupendous building ever erected for public spectacles. —New York American.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

(From the Houston Post.)
Some one has written the list of American authors that the Europeans read, and in it there is not to be found the name of a single American woman. The fact remains that as yet there is no American woman writer that can stand in the same class with Mrs. Humphrey Ward, according to English opinion.

The mikado of Japan has presented Prof. Abby Leach with a very handsome golden cup; a mark of great honor. Miss Leach is a member of the fellowship committee of the American school at Athens, and vice president of the school and college organization of the Middle States. She was the first Radcliffe student, then Harvard annex, but took her degrees at Vassar, later, studying at the University of Leipzig. The cup is the first sent by the Japanese emperor to a woman, and is in recognition of her services to education.

Someone has suggested that women who do their own work have regular kitchen uniforms, similar to those worn by nurses. These dresses could be made of the blue and white or blue and white striped materials used for nurses' dresses, and with them could be worn linen collars and cuffs. A uniform outfit would call for the following list: Three or four plain dresses, aprons of dark or light gingham in two kinds, the bib aprons, also the white bib aprons and the small tie aprons, also the white bib apron and the small kind known as the chaffing dish apron. One's outfit should include caps, and when arrayed in these clean and attractive frocks one would always be presentable when the door bell rings. The ringing of the door bell usually causes all sorts of commotion when a woman is doing her own work and this is unnecessary if she will get these fetching work dresses, and one thing about them pleasant to note—they are so simple that they will make little difference in the amount of work for the handmaid.

Bags and more bags. Each day we hear of a new kind and all of them are serviceable. The latest is a bag fashioned of cretonne or some such material, outlining the descriptive word on the outside. It is used to hold coffee and should be placed either in the pantry or the kitchen in a convenient place. With this little bag one does not have to search hours and hours every time a cork is needed. There is a cousin to this small bag—the twine bag. Whenever you take the string from any sort of a package put it away in the twine bag and you'll always know where to find it when you need it. It takes only a few minutes for the making of these small articles and you are repaid a hundred times over by their usefulness.

A New Art Cloth.
Arts and crafts cloth, but which is also called "crafts cloth," at the busy counters, is a new material for embroidery and general decorative purposes. It is like burlap in weave, but woven of tough wool and dyed in the best art shades, which are necessarily less crude than those of the cotton burlap. It is desirable for plain and embroidered portieres, table and couch covers and cushions. Its durability recommends it for college boys' rooms and dens, for library use and general sitting room wear.

An Idea Borrowed From Old Virginia.
The Virginia housewife is famous for her savory roast duck. This is due to the orange flavor combined with it, for she, instead of using onion, as is elsewhere done, roasts one large or several small oranges in the body of the duck. The oranges are washed and put in whole without being peeled, then the dressing is added. This plan may be adopted with turkey and chicken with excellent results.

Claridge Talks About Cotton.
If the South has twelve million bales of cotton, for instance, and the spinners, aided and abetted by the gamblers, get it for $20 per bale less than it is intrinsically worth—well, it will be a great day for the South when her business people acquire the sense to see that they, as well as the farmers, lose the $240,000,000. The South has sold two crops, of 12,000,000 to 12,000,000 bales each, at 10 cents and above. The man who estimates the present crop at above the latter figure does it without reason. Then why should this crop sell at 7 1/2 cents to 9 cents? The spinners took as large a crop at 10 cents and above, paying high wages, high salaries, and re-earning 10 to 20 per cent dividends. There is just one and only one reason why farmers lose for the 1908 crop: The farmers are willing to take less. Is the spinner to blame? And the farmer er who owes money and must sell; there is nothing to be sold, except that he does not own his cotton and, therefore, is not supposed to have much to say about the price it brings. The farmers able to hold till the dress cotton is out of their way, but who dump on the market in ninety days, at less than 10 cents, a crop that it takes nearly a year to grow and quite a year to use up—well, if they are satisfied, or think they cannot get more, it is none of our business.—Industrial Record.

Protect Game Birds.
If members of the legislature will keep an ear to the ground they will catch the mutterings which have begun among farmers who want the killing of game birds to cease. Two of De Witt county's progressive farmers, Captain Frank Blair of Clinton, and Emil Kauffman of Yorktown, tell the Cuerc Star of the value of these birds to the farming interests of the country. They say these, their friends in feathers, are valuable both as insect and grass and weed seed destroyers. Both of these gentlemen strongly favor the idea of protecting quail, doves and other game birds from slaughter for a period of at least three years. The Star quotes Mr. Kauffman as saying: "With every fellow who has a gun or can get one being allowed to kill twenty-five of these birds every day throughout the season it was just a shameless, merciless slaughter out of all proportion to the breeding increase of these birds and there would very soon be no game birds."

This further comment is made by the Star: "Both these gentlemen strongly favored the idea of protecting these birds from slaughter for at least three years and allowing them to measurably catch up with the great havoc and destruction the hunters have up to this time made among them."

When the farmers, who are on the ground floor and constitute the basis of the country's prosperity, warn us of the dangers which threaten the agricultural interests of the country from insects because of the ruthless destruction of birds which destroy these pests, our law-makers should be careful how they ignore these timely admonitions.—Dallas News.

Why Newspapers Lie.

Under the heading, "Why Newspapers Lie," the Western Publisher prints the following:

"What makes you newspapers tell so many lies?" asked a rather inconsiderate Peorian of a newspaper man the other day, says the Peoria Herald-Transcript.

"Because we have to get most of our information from liars," was the jolting reply.

When a newspaper reporter asks for information do you tell him the truth or only so much of it as will help your cause? When you have a chance to give your side of an affair in the newspapers, don't you take precious care to make a good argument for yourself?

A newspaper cannot manufacture knowledge. It must collect it. Every news item that is published, providing it is not of court record—and newspapers have been used for mistakes in court records, too—is based on information secured from some one.

An enthusiastic investor calls a reporter and informs him that he has purchased a piece of property and will erect immediately a fine building—that the value of the property has increased fifty per cent in the last three years. The building does not go up and it develops that the property has been sold at a loss. The paper stands the blame for the inaccuracy.

An altercation between two prominent gentlemen takes place. One man when asked about it declares that he thumped the other man five times and chased him a block. The other man declares that he hurled his opponent to the ground and would have inflicted severe injury upon him had not help arrived. The newspaper must hold an informal court and take evidence to get at the truth.

A good and faithful member of a church congregation comes to the paper and discloses the fact that owing to serious trouble in the church the minister is about to resign. It is published the next day; half a dozen members of the church declare that the utmost harmony exists and that the minister has no intention of resigning. This is also published.

The minister resigns the next week. A building burns. The proprietor gives the loss at $20,000. Does the reporter accept this fact? If he does he is likely to find that for purpose of his own connected with insurance and other things the amount has been placed $20,000 too high.

A railroad officer is about to resign. The paper prints the news. "What a liar that sheet is!" shouts the official. He denies the rumor by calling the paper a liar for a month and then resigns.
