VOLUME 38, NUMBER 5

SINCE YOU'VE NO doubt watched at least some of the Olympic Games, and since wife Carol has already expounded on the every-four-years' gathering of nations in their peaceful way of attempting to show who's superior, Ye Editor thought he'd better get his two cents worth in this week, or it might be 1996 before it would once again be timely.

This competing of nations has gotten to be a problem, on and off the field, with such things as boycotts as in Mr. Carter's case in 1980, and the complete elimination of the Games during the World War II years.

We thought it was unusual for the current Games for the old Soviet Bloc countries to continue competing as one team, and especially under the name "Unified Team." As you know if you have followed international news, the Soviet Union has been anything but "unified" for the past year or two, with some provinces ready to go to war if need be, in order to break away from Mother Russia.

So it's really unfair for the sportswriters, when listing the ranking of nations according to medals won, to group the old Soviet Union as one team, but apparently for Olympic purposes, they had no choice for this particular games. The Soviets continue to pile up an overall lead in total medals won in the Olympics.

The Unified group is still benefitting from the years when they spent millions (billions?) of dollars to build a world-beating team so the Communist leaders could brag and imply to the world that their system was the best on earth. Never mind that millions of their people might be starving to death in the meantime, while money was going to support the elite Soviet sports program.

At least, now that the Soviet

Their dream was to just take their play, "The Boys Next Door," to UIL State Competition. They did much more than that though. As Mrs. Hawkins expressed, they pray, but others, like Romig, Singh, and Pruitt say that besides praying, they like eating at Polynesian Garden before each competition. government has been overhauled, the sports organization has been done away with. The successes achieved by the Russians at the current Olympics have been a result of "carryover" from this previous system. It will be interesting to see how they fare in 1996, especially when they will be competing under such names as Belarussia, Ukraine, Georgia, etc.

During the last winter Olympics, we heard some complaining by network officials covering the events that there were not enough events during the winter session to sustain viewer interest over the course of the run.

Conversely, during the two-week span of the Summer Games, the reporters are virtually running over themselves, and NBC has experimented with three extra premium channels, in an attempt to cover everything that goes on during the Summer Olympics.

The solution to these two problems is almost so simple that it's frightening. In fact, it's probably so simple that it would be foolish to assume that the International Olympic Committee could be persuaded to consider it.

Here's what you do to alleviate the problem: take a number of the lesser, indoor events, away from the event-rich Summer Games, and give them to the event-poor winter session.

Who said that boxing absolutely, positively had to be competed in the summer. Couldn't a fighter beat up on another one just as easily in the winter as in the summer??

Then there are volleyball (men's and women's), wrestling, table tennis, weightlifting, fencing, handball and judo, just to name a few, which could just as easily be given to the winter schedule, and at least then they might get a little more attention. At the present time, many of these get precious little mention or coverage.

You could even take gymnastics and make the "big switch," to give the Winter Games one more heavyhitting event. (Then at least some of us, when the TV coverage starts (Continued on Page 5)

Survivors include his wife, Barbara Lovelace of the home; a daughter, Brenda Sherwood of League City; a son, John Lovelace of Plano; three grandsons of League City; and two brothers, Jerry Lovelace of Houston and Leon Lovelace of Grapevine.

Services were held Tuesday at the Trinity Fellowship Church in Richardson, with Dr. Carl Anderson officiating.

All three of the Lovelace brothers were sports stars at Farwell High School, and all three went on to play football for the Texas Tech Red Raiders.

"He was a helluva guy," said Richard Willis, who roomed with Lovelace during the 1961 season. "He was a big, old lumbering boy, about 6-4 or 6-5, and the thing I remember most was the kindness and softness of him.

"To be that big and that type of guy was something else. He was always able to pick out the good things in a person," Willis said.

The thing I remember most of all about Johnny was that he was more concerned about his brothers playing well than about himself playing well," said Guy Griffis, who roomed with Jerry Lovelace at Tech. "All three of those boys were good football players and very, very close.

Letter To The Editor

Dear Bovina Blade:

We enjoy reading The Blade each week and we don't want to miss an issue.

We lived in Bovina in the 1960s, and still know many of the senior citizens. It's always nice to read what they are doing.

I save the paper and pass it on to two of our children, who graduated from school there. They read about the kids they were in school with.

We wish you continued success and we send a big "Hello" to all our friends.

Following dinner, a short and informal memorial was conducted by Alicia Rapp and Evelyn Freeland. It was in remembrance of the family members deceased since the 1990 reunion. They were: Margaret and Leland (Jim) Goodwine, Jonathan (Jon) Schlenker, Harlan O'Rear, Sarah Cantrall, William (Bill) Ballard and Charles T. Reeve.

On Monday, all were invited to an 8 a.m. "Breakfast on the Prairie" prepared by Sharon, Elaine and Bill White. Floyd Reeve welcomed the caravan of cars in a unique way. He had arranged bales of hay to spell out "Hi" as they drove through the gate to the high point on the original Reeve ranch. It overlooked a playa lake, lush, green prairie and grazing cattle. Only those who had to make early departures missed the delicious sausage and pancake breakfast prepared by the cooks.

In route back to town, the caravan made a brief stop at the old house made of adobe bricks by the late Floyd W. Reeve, his sons and neighbors in the mid-twenties. It was there that Floyd S. Reeve, grandson, was prevailed upon to give a water-witching demonstration which his grandfather had taught him. Even some of the most skeptical became believers as they were encouraged to try the technique!

Infatuation

Detecting

By RON TRUSLER M.Ed., LPC, LCDC, LMFT (Director of Clinical & Substance Abuse Services, Central Plains Center for MHMR & Substance Abuse)

I came across some material at a seminar the other day that I thought you might benefit from. I have written about this type of thing before, but this has a different slant that might help if you are in an infatuation-type relationship.

Infatuation is a strong attraction between two people. It can lead to strong physical reactions and preoccupation. It is not the same as love. Being infatuated occurs with someone you don't really know. You can't deal with reality and be infatuated at the same time. When one comes in, the other fades.

Infatuation brings about such a strong physical reaction that many confuse it with love. The reaction or feeling tends to verify in the person's mind that this must really be serious due to the feelings they are experiencing. It's like, "How can something that feels so right be wrong?"

There is usually a mixture of pleasure and pain. You feel on top of the world and then suddenly you are depressed. It is hard for the infatuated person to see the reality of things. They have the tendency to distort or bend reality. Infatuation is not a good state of mind to be in when making serious decisions. Our thinking is clouded. The infatuation will end, but the consequences of those decisions may not.

We usually have an ideal type of person in our mind. When we become infatuated, we are usually tapping into that ideal type fantasy. We experience a "glow," and it's hard to examine those feelings because of the fear of having to give up the ideal.

What usually happens is that something causes us to come crashing down and reality hits us hard. It's easier if we can gradually exaRON TRUSLER mine our feelings--the shock isn't so bad. If you find yourself in a relationship that is built upon infatuation, don't despair too much--it does show that you are emotionally alive. I'm not sure some people are.

Richard G. (Dick) Montgomery was cited during the 52nd annual B.T. Bulletins ... meeting of the Association of Texas Electric Cooperatives for his 23 years of service in the rural electric industry.

Montgomery's service was all with Deaf Smith Electric. From a beginning as member services director in 1969, he advanced through the position of industrial relations director to serve 18 years as assistant to the general manager before being moved into the top spot in July of 1991.

A native of Altus, Oklahoma, he attended schools there and what is now known as Oklahoma State University at Stillwater. He served in the military, then was employed as a petroleum specialist by a Houston firm.

He was employed later by Cosden Petroleum at Big Spring as a sales representative, then by Southern Farm Supply/Farmland Industries in Amarillo as a petroleum specialist before joining the cooperative staff.

He and his wife, Pat, are parents of two grown sons, Mauri and Jay, who also reside in Hereford.

DICK MONTGOMERY

Basketball, although it's a wintertime sport, would not be a good one to switch, and here's why: This year, at long last, the U.S.A. is getting to use its truly best players, in the form of the NBA stars. If they held the olympic sport in the winter, these stars would be less likely to be able to participate, since their regular season is in full swing. The same would be true of college stars, and even the European League, so this will probably never even be brought up for discussion.

More than likely, neither will any of the other ideas expounded herein. But if they want a way to balance out the overall Olympic program, this could do it.

And with the Winter Olympics set to be held on alternate even years (next one to be in 1994) from the Summer Olympics, perhaps it's an idea whose time has come. Write to your Olympic Committee Member (wonder who that is?)

By RICHARD L. GRISHAM "Therefore, he (Absalom) said to his servants, "See, Joab's field is next to mine, and he has barley there; go and set it on fire." II Samuel 14:30.

Looking Up!

What must our young people do to get our attention? In recent weeks we have seen farmers burning off their wheat stubble, but Absalom burned off Joab's barley field before it was harvested. Why? To get Joab's attention. Absalom had not seen his father, King David, in two years, and his request to Joab, David's Chief-of-Staff, to arrange a meeting with his father went unheeded. Finally, in desparation to get Joab's attention, and ultimately the attention of his father David, Absalom burned Joab's barley fields.

Too often our youth have to go to great extremes to get their parents to pay attention and hear their needs. So, like Absalom, they intentionally get into trouble, or carry on recklessly, or dress extremely, in order to say, "Hey, I am important! Listen to me! I have needs! Please care about me and see me for who I am!'

I know that there have been times when I have been guilty of not listening to my kids or to other young people. Perhaps we have all been guilty at times of giving our children money, material possessions, and even criticism, rather than what they need the most, us! Our children need us to be there when they are coping with peer pressure and struggling with selfdoubt.

ents and other adults will take the now!

Help Children To Shop Wisely

by Debbie Pollard When shopping with your child, you have a great opportunity to develop their skill in finding the best buy for the money. Choose an item that is something they recognize, but not something they are trying to buy, such as milk or bread. Ask them to tell you which brand, or which size container is the time to listen to what they say and try to understand how they feel. It has been said that for youth, love is best spelled, "T-I-M-E!" Young people want us to have time for them and to spend some time with them. They really want to know we care.

Absalom felt abandoned by his own father. As King, it was certainly within David's power to find his rebellious son and bring him back home, but he did not. So Absalom took matters into his own hands. Even Joab, another adult, seemed not to care how Absalom felt, and ignored Absalom's pleas for a meeting with his father. So Absalom did what he felt he had to do to get their attention. In frustation and desparation, he burned Joab's barley fields! It worked! LISA RENEE MCMEANS and BOBBY JOE RED-"Why have your servants set my fields on fire?" (v. 31) Absalom got Joab's attention and finally secured an audience with his father David. But David's denial of Absalom had evil consequences for years to come!

Hopefully, unlike David, we will not force our children to make an appointment with us before we will listen to their needs. And hopefully, unlike Joab, we won't force our young people to go to great extremes to get the attention they deserve. As summer draws to a close, why not spend a little extra time with your teenage children or grandchildren. Let them know you care and accept them for who they are. And go out of your way to let the other youth of our community know they are important to you. Youth need to know that par- Time goes by so quickly, so do it best buy? They may have learned some buying skills at school. Let them show you what they know. Ask them to share how they made their choice.

Take a few minutes to show them the unit price label on the shelf. This helps them spot quickly which one costs the least per ounce or pound. Then ask them how much they think the family needs. Would one size be better than another for your family? Would one type be better for the use intended? Is there some other reason why the lowest price may not be the best buy?

Share how sometimes our personal preference for a taste or texture of a food influences our choice about which one is the best buy. Some people prefer whole grain bread over enriched white bread, and are willing to pay more for it.

Explain how the giant, economy size may not be the best buy if you need only half as much. Help them see that products that look alike may have different purposes, such as skim, low-fat and homogenized milk. Show how other products that may look entirely different can be a better buy, such as non-fat dry milk for cooking; or, canned rather than fresh tomatoes for soups and sauces.

If you are shopping for clothing, let them compare the cost of brand name items with the cost of similar items having a store or generic brand. Let them figure out whether it is more important to them to have more of the items (jeans, shirts, shoes) at a lower price, or fewer at a higher price. Which is more important to them, and what trade-off are they willing to make to get what they want?

Next, choose an item on your list and give them the responsibility for finding the best buy. Build their confidence by showing them
