TECHNOLOGY HAS outsmarted itself again. Or maybe it has just outsmarted me.

There I sat in my kitchen with two cookers full of beans in quart jars looking all green and nutritious, only to discover that the brand new kitchen range which I received last Christmas had no intention of canning those green beans.

It is one of those sleek-looking self-cleaning models with the glass cooktop and solid cast iron elements. Back when this thing was still on the drawing boards, the designers (who were most likely of the male species) probably told themselves that anyone wanting a nice modern stove like this, probably wouldn't be doing anything as old-timey as canning green beans. But if a female had designed the thing, she would have put one large burner in the back, big enough to accommodate a pressure canner.

This reminds me of the Ford

The public was outraged. And As a result, several reforms were initiated. Among them, the development of more extensive FAA medical exams.

The newspaper's series was the result of a phone tip from a frustrated doctor.

He told of a pilot who'd been rushed to the hospital near death from an overdose of cocaine.

A survey of the area's hospitals proved this was not an isolated incident.

Upon further investigation, reporters learned that screening flight personnel for drug use was forbidden. And that the FAA medical exams didn't mandate blood and urine analyses so drug use couldn't be detected.

Reforms that may never have occurred if it hadn't been for a couple of reporters pursuing a story.
