By Grace of Autoists, Cycling Might Return

It was like picking up a newspaper of 35 years ago to read that a young member of the Buffalo Cycling Club won a 90-mile bicycle road race at the Great Lakes Exposition the other day.

Sixty cyclists took part in this cross-country race. The affair was conducted by the field secretary of the League of American Wheelmen, and some 5000 people rode their bicycles up to the exposition grounds to see the finish of the race.

Nothing like that has appeared in the papers since the day when impudent urchins used to yell "Get a horse!" at the be-goggled and linen-dustered occupants of snorting automobiles. The League of American Wheelmen was a prominent outfit in those days, and bicycles went whirring smoothly-or, as the terrain might dictate, not so smoothly-along city streets and country roads.

So it seemed rather good to read about this bicycle revival. For the automobile, which has rearranged our civilization and proved one of the most convenient and usable gadgets that man ever invented for himself, has at the same time deprived us of some unimportant but pleasant little diversions, and the bicycle tour is one of them.

To be sure, you still see plenty of bikes. There has even been a boom in the bicycle manufacturing business in the last few years; shops where you can rent a wheel for an hour's spin through the park have sprung up here and there in cities all across the country.

But that isn't bicycling. How many people, today, have the hardihood to set out on a real cross-country trip by bicycle? It would be a lot of fun to hop on Junior's bike and take a little week-end excursion; there'd be good exercise in it, a sense of adventure, and a feeling of freedom. You could get acquainted with the countryside that way, as you never can on a motor trip.

Yes, it would be fine. But who wants to do it when must give their names and addresses, the roads are full of autos—especially when so many of only their initials will be printed. Addr them are driven by the break-neck fools who infest our highways nowadays? Ceaseless hammering on the same spot helps win prize fights... it is the essence of advertising success. Not until enough individuals in the same neighborhood have been sufficiently saturated with a certain slogan, say, to cause them to react on one another does adtising become a social phenomenon.

The modern business man realizes that his best customers wear out at a rate of nearly 3 per cent a year. Advertising-made prospects disappear far faster. Casual impressions, however favorable, dry like dew in the heat of competition.

"Cumulative" effects of advertising come not from one advertisement paving the way for another. This is negligible, to say the least. Cumulative effect, on the contrary, comes from salvaging as customers half-finished prospects.

Each advertiser is in much the same plight. If he quits successful, he loses money. If he quits unsuccessful, he tosses away an equity in public recognition far more valuable than the money: So many thousand partly manufactured customers. The second group are spending as little money as they can and still keep their names before the public. They believe themselves wise spenders because they spend so very cautiously—or perhaps reluctantly is a better word... THE BALD TRUTH IS THAT THESE RELUCTANT SPENDERS ARE, AS A CLASS, THE REAL OVER-SPENDERS IN ADVERTISING!

Life of the Saint

Of the Day By REV. S. E. BYRNE

ST. MARTHA St. John tells us that "Jesus loved Martha and Mary and Lazarus.' and yet but few glimpses are left us of them. First, the sisters are set before us with a word. Martha received Jesus into her house, and was busy in outward loving labor, while Mary sat in silence at the feet she had bathed with her tears. Then their brother is sick, and they send to Jesus, "Lord, he whom thou lovest is sick." And taking his time our Lord came, and they went out to meet him; and then follows that scene of unutterable tenderness and of profession of faith. And then once again, on the eve of his Passion, we see Jesus at Bethany. Martha, true to her character, is serving. When the storm of persecution came, the family of Bethany, with a few companions were put into a boat, without oars, and drifted to the coast of France, where through their efforts many of the people were converted to the faith of
