District Vocation Coordinators Meet

O. L. McGahee, coordinator of the vocational education program in Ranger, attended a meeting of coordinators of this district at Abilene Saturday, when many phases of the work were discussed.

Student placement was discussed at the meeting and it was brought out that all placements should be completed by the end of August. It was brought out that there were many more applications for apprenticeships than could be filled, as the maximum that can be placed is 30, while about 100 applicants for these 30 positions have been received.

Girls can also secure laboratory and secretarial training under the program, it was pointed out today by McGahee, while openings for boys should be available as bakers, automobile mechanics, radio service men, clerks in dry goods or department stores, as cleaners and dyers, electrical wiring and gas service men.

Man Perfects A New Motor For Everyday Uses

By United Press
AMARILLO, Tex.—C. D. Gregory of Brownfield believes he has perfected a motor, operating on the same principle as a compressed air machine, that will completely revolutionize the entire motor industry—from a washing machine to a steam ship.

"The motor will do away with steam, gasoline and electric motors," Gregory declared.

The inventor said an airplane motor weighing 750 pounds could be supplanted by his motor which weighs only 170 pounds. He claimed his motor would run indefinitely once it was started.

"It is not perpetual motion," he explained, "but it is as near to it as anything invented so far."

Gregory said he had conferred with Elliott Roosevelt, son of the president, and with the Assistant Chief of the Aeronautic Department.

"The government would not make me an offer," he said, "but a number of officials were very much interested and said they would see me through if I would show the machine working."

Roosevelt was "very much interested" in the motor, he said.

The motor has many number of pistons, odd or even, and is made of especially prepared metal. There are two motors, one to pull and one to compress. It has two air tanks, one to start the motor and the other from which to operate. There are two shafts, one straight and the other eccentric, the latter being used on the compressor.

From the pressure tank, the motor is started. As the compressor goes to functioning it builds up pressure in the operating tank. The started tank gradually cuts off. All exhaust is captured.

Although this principle has never been known to work before, and while it is a known fact that friction overcomes energy, Gregory contends his motor is able to operate through the straight and eccentric shafts and through an arrangement of check valves.

Gregory said he had worked many years in perfecting the invention.

"I started on the motor in 1913 and guess I have changed it 100 times since," he said.

He said the engine would replace any kind of motor power. There is no vibration and no noise, he said, since the friction is minimized. And there is no exhaust escape.

If Gregory's claims prove true, a fleet of planes could circle the globe without refueling; likewise a battleship or a fleet of submarines. Only a small hand pump to replenish the starter tank would be needed. And maybe that would not have to be used. Unpredictable changes would be made in the oil industry.

Control of Soil Erosion Adds to Reservoir Life

WASHINGTON — Water and power reservoirs in many parts of the country, representing several billions of dollars in investments, are being endangered by excessive silting, according to the Soil Conservation Service, in a new bulletin, "Siltation of Reservoirs," just issued by the Department of Agriculture. Cleaning a reservoir, the bulletin emphasizes, is usually too expensive and the only way out is to stop erosion and keep out the mud.

The problem of protecting these reservoirs from destructive silting goes hand in hand with the problem of saving farm and ranch lands from ruin by uncontrolled soil erosion, according to Henry M. Eakin, in charge of sedimentation and hydraulic studies for the Soil Conservation Service, author of the bulletin.

The main reliance for permanent conservation of reservoir resources, he says, must be found in the control of silt production at its primary sources—in the fields, pastures and watershed area behind the reservoir. This can be done, according to Eakin, by more widespread and effective application of established erosion control methods.

Information presented in the new bulletin is based upon studies of 25 reservoirs throughout the country, and represents the beginning of the first nation-wide survey of this kind. Studies will be made of additional reservoirs, to find out how silting can be reduced.

Mr. Eakin points out that although certain supplementary practices of debris disposal may be employed to guard reservoir storage capacity against silting, they are generally subject to prohibitive difficulties and limitations. He also states that hydraulic dredging and the mechanical removal of silt from reservoirs would generally cost from 5 to 50 times as much as the original investment.

"Siltation of Reservoirs" is Technical Bulletin 524. Copies may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. C., at 40 cents each.

Thompson Believes Opponent's Plans Would Hurt Oilmen

Turning of the East Texas oil field loose as proposed by his opponent would not only ruin that field but would stop oil development all over the state and cause the shutting in of half of the wells in Texas. Earnest O. Thompson, chairman of the State Railroad Commission, who will speak at Eastland Wednesday night, asserts.

Extensive arrangements have been made by independent oil operators of the county for the ex-Amarillo mayor's Eastland speech. The Eastland High School Band, directed by G. W. Collum, will be heard in a 45-minute concert starting at 7:15 p. m. The speech will be on the south side of the courthouse square.

Thompson, who carries the endorsement of the independents of Texas, stated at Houston last week that East-Texas has learned the true value of oil conservation. He said the program he has fostered has increased the life of the field by several years by maintaining the pressure which makes the wells flow and that ultimate recovery from the field will be about two billion barrels more because of the conservation policy.

Thompson challenges the statements of his run-off opponent, Frank Morris of Dallas, whom he led more than 288,000 votes in the July primary, that Morris has the support of the independents.

DROUGHT AREA STUDY STARTS AT AMARILLO

By United Press
AMARILLO, Aug. 17.—Drought, its effect and what can be done to counteract their evils became subject of official study today as the Great Plains "drought" area committee started on a tour of the nation's "dust bowl."

Representatives of half a dozen government departments made up the committee which set out at President Roosevelt's orders to find the facts about the drought of the past three years.

One of the investigators was Rexford Guy Tugwell, Roosevelt brain trust guy who predicted two years ago that much of the country's richest farm land was fast turning to desert.

As the committee began its work it was expected that residents of the Texas Panhandle would try to persuade Tugwell that he was wrong. After the conference the investigators planned to go to Dalhart today and continue tomorrow on their automobile tour of the 1934 "dust bowl" area before moving into the area which suffered from this year's drought.

The tour will end at Aberdeen, S. D., where the committee will report to President Roosevelt on August 28th.

A Selfish Spirit Stirs The Rabble-Rouser

The term "rabble-rouser" isn't supposed to be a compliment. But when the Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith addressed a National Press Club luncheon in Washington the other day he admitted the epithet had been applied to him—and he gloried in it.

Mr. Smith explained himself like this. "Oh, I know," he said. "If you say 'the flag' you are a rabble-rouser. The very first reference to the Stars and Stripes makes you a rabble-rouser."

"And never refer to the Bible. That makes you a demagog, and a rabble-rouser. Never reach down where people pray. Never reach down where people are sincere. Stay out where people are smart, drunk, and sophisticated. Stay with them. Then you are somebody."

Mr. Smith makes an eloquent plea and makes demagog sound like a high and holy thing. The only trouble is that he forgets that the spirit in which you do a thing can be a good deal more important than the thing you do.

Getting down and appealing to the sincere and humble emotions by which people live is not solely a trick of the demagog. Lincoln was a past master at it.

The American Revolution was fought largely because such men as Patrick Henry and Samuel Adams had the same knack. Bryan could do it, and so could Theodore Roosevelt, and both men occupy honored places in our history.

The thing that stamps a man as a rabble-rouser and a demagog is the fact that he appeals to those profound and magnificent emotions for his own ends. He does not really care whether the high aspirations which are evoked by his appeal to those emotions are fulfilled or not; he has an ax to grind, and his appeal to those emotions is just his way of getting someone to turn the grindstone for him.

The tragic thing about the demagog's work is the fact that he arouses a force which could move mountains, and then turns it to his own selfish ends.

For the human race, mean and weak and confused as it often is, nevertheless is capable of magnificent things. It has the power and the heroism and the self-sacrifice to work miracles... the faith that can move mountains... if only the right appeal be made. The force is there, waiting to be put to work.

Now and again a man arises who can unleash that power, who can demand that men live up to the best there is in them—and when he does, the wheel of history makes another turn. But it is not a game to be played lightly.

A selfish man can unleash the same power only to debase it, can rouse men to the pitch where they can transcend themselves—only to lead them into some swamp such as Hitler has created in Germany.

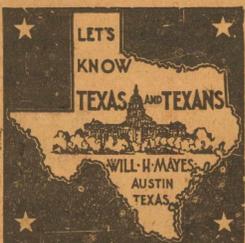

It is not words that make the demagog. It is the motive back of the words—the soul of the man who utters them.

Mr. Smith is deeply mistaken if he thinks that any intelligent man objects to an appeal to the emotions of the mass. The objection is to the use which is made of those emotions once they are fully stirred.

Life of the Saint Of the Day

By REV. S. E. BYRNE

Seven monks, named Liberatus, Boniface, Servus, Rusticus, Rogatus, Septimus, and Maximus, who lived in a monastery near Capsa, in the province of Byzacena, were summoned to Carthage by Huneric, the Arian Vandal king in Africa, in the seventh year of his reign. They were first treated kindly and were tempted with great promises, but as they remained constant in the belief of the Trinity, and of one Baptism, they were loaded with irons and thrown into a dark dungeon. Some of the faithful being friends of the guards, visited the Saints day and night, to be instructed by them and mutually to encourage one another to suffer for the faith of Christ. The king, learning this, commanded them to be more closely confined, loaded with heavier irons, and tortured with a cruelty never heard of till that time. Soon after, he condemned them to be put into an old ship and burnt at sea. The martyrs walked cheerfully to the shore, unmindful of the insults of the Arians as they passed along. Particular offers were promised Maximus, who was the youngest; but God, who makes the tongues of children eloquent to praise His name, gave him strength to withstand all their efforts, and he boldly told them that they would never be able to separate him from his holy abbot and brethren, with whom he had borne the labors of a penitential life for the sake of everlasting glory. An old vessel was filled with dry sticks, and the seven martyrs were put on board and bound on the wood; and fire was put to it several times, but it went out immediately, and all endeavors to kindle it were in vain. The tyrant, in rage and confusion, gave orders that the martyr's brains should be dashed out with oars, which was done, and their bodies cast into the sea. They suffered in the year 483.

Rich and Reckless

By Mary Raymond

BEGIN HERE TODAY

MOLLY MILFORD, rich and popular, has received proposals of marriage from three suitors, but BRENT STUART, whom she loves, has not asked her to marry him.

Bored with parties, Molly asks Brent to take her to "The Red Poppy," a questionable night club. He refuses, Molly, annoyed, goes with WICK ROSS, another admirer.

The lights go out suddenly and when they come on again Molly finds herself dancing with a handsome stranger. He asks her to have dinner with him. Molly's answer is evasive.

The stranger is, in reality, NELSON FERGUSON, bank robber, and he is one of a group planning to spirit Molly away and hold her for ransom.

NOW ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER IV

THE newspaper front pages were filled with details of a bank robbery. Molly read them, but, despite the headlines, she was sure it was going to be a dreadfully dull day.

Bored with herself, Molly yawned over the newspaper with its headlines about the bank robbery. She answered a telephone summons indifferently. Then her pulses leaped at the sound of a deep, strange voice. Almost strange, for there was something familiar about that voice.

Her interesting stranger. He said, "Hello, Molly Milford." "Hello, Sam Smith!" "That isn't my real name. It's Nelson—Whittaker. My friends call me Nelson. Won't you?" "Am I a friend?" Molly asked, glad the blue-eyed stranger could not see the rush of color to her face.

"I hope so, Molly." "Nelson is a nice name. Not hard to say."

"You're not angry because I called?" "No. Why should I be?"

There was a moment of silence. Then, "I thought you might be bored."

"I am. Terribly." "So am I. I was wondering if you'd have dinner with me. But I suppose that's impossible."

"Not impossible," Molly spoke in a firm tone. "You mean you'll try some French cooking?"

"Yes." The word fluttered in her throat. "I'll come out about 6. Or would you rather meet me some place down town?"

Molly considered this a moment. It might be wiser to meet him down town. "I could meet you at the side entrance of Wilson-Marx's around 6."

"I'll be there."

FOR dinner at Frenchy's—wherever Frenchy's might be—she would wear her new pleated blue crepe with the white patent belt and a cluster of patent-leather flowers at the neckline. A small white hat and a white coat with the white fox collar.

"Why the excess energy?" Donna asked, finding Molly attacking her soft shiner's hair with a vigorous brush.

"Oh, just something to do," Molly admitted, smiling. "I'm fed up with sitting around waiting time."

"What's become of the Four Horsemen?"

A girl was standing there. A girl who was as much like Molly as her own reflection in a mirror.

"Wick bores me. Hubert bores me. Donald bores me."

"What about Brent?" Donna asked, surveying Molly with amused eyes.

"Brent bores me more than any of them," Molly spoke vigorously. "Brent is the original case man. All he'd need would be an excuse to drag a woman about by her ear. Anyway, I've a new man on my mind. He's handsome and stimulating."

"I can't quite believe you've toppled for a new man," Donna drawled.

"Not toppled. Just leaning over a little, like the Tower of Pisa." Molly put down the brush, sat on a stool near Donna and looked up at her out of lovely, candid eyes. She said slowly, "You wouldn't understand, because you've always been conventional. When I'm married I'll settle down and be a model wife, too. But since I'm not, I'm going out and having dinner with a man I ran across last week at The Red Poppy!"

"Molly!" Donna's voice was startled. "What could Brent have been thinking of to take you there?"

"It was Wick."

"Poor Wick. You must have given him the devil of a time. He surely believes self-preservation is the first law. Honestly, you aren't serious about going out with this—this Bohemian?"

"He isn't a Bohemian," Molly spoke slowly. "He's much more the things that couldn't happen—yet it had.

Talking with this girl with the golden-brown hair was almost like talking to herself. But vastly different, too. Because unless terrible and cruel things had happened to you, your voice could never sound so cold, so hopeless, as this girl's did.

Molly studied the other girl. The same slender nose, slightly tipped. The same shade of hair, the same eyes, the same contour of face. They were about the same size, too. A difference of two or three pounds, at the most.

"Well," Molly said shakily. "I guess I've met my double. They say everyone has one."

"So what?" the other asked sarcastically. "We're a million miles apart in these clothes, aren't we?"

MOVED by a sudden impulse, half compassion and some other feeling she didn't stop to analyze, Molly said: "I'd like to change clothes with you. I'd as soon be wearing yours as mine."

"Oh yeah!" "Please believe me. I'm in earnest. I want to change with you."

The girl's laugh rang harshly. "Tell that to someone who hasn't cut her wisdom teeth yet. Besides," she added, "I won't need clothes much where I'm going."

"You're going away?" "Yes."

"Then please take these with you—isn't there some place where we could change? We must hurry because I'm meeting a friend here at 6."

"You haven't much time," the other girl replied. "All right. Anything to oblige. If you're planning to take the boy friend the shock of his life, I'll accommodate you. It will be a kind of shock to some friends of mine, too. I guess we can make it before the store closes. With everybody putting away stock, the rest room will be empty."

A few minutes later Molly stared at herself. Yes, clothes made all the difference. In the cheap, bright green crepe and the cheap hat with a green feather at the side she looked exactly as the other girl had a moment before.

The shoes were a trifle loose, but not enough to matter greatly. The other girl opened her purse and took out a handkerchief and a small package, then handed her purse to Molly. She was smiling queerly.

"Empty," Molly decided. Her own purse was filled with bills. She took one bill out.

"There's about $50 or $60 in bills in this purse," she told the girl. "Please keep them. And look me up soon. I'm sure there's something I could do to help you. We're not miles apart—two girls cut from the same pattern."

"I'm afraid it's too late—now," the other said sadly. "I'm going away. But it's nice to know there are some kind people—even now."

Something in her expression caught at Molly's heart. "I don't know your name," she cried.

"It's on an envelope in the purse," the girl told her. At the side entrance of the store, Molly saw Nelson Whittaker, anxiously scanning the faces of the crowd. He looked into her face for a moment blankly. Then, as Molly smiled, recognition leaped to his eyes.

CUBA'S BUILDER

CUBAN FLAG BEING RAISED AT MORRO CASTLE, HAVANA

CUBA was trying to free itself of Spanish rule, when, in 1875, Jose Miguel Gomez, son of a wealthy planter, took up its cause. For 20 years, he participated in Cuban politics. Then, in 1895, came the final war for freedom, and young Gomez rose quickly to the rank of major general. So active was he that in one day he engaged in 17 minor battles.

When he became president in 1908, he reorganized the army, improved the ports, built new roads and bridges, extended the railroads, and modernized the school system.

Gomez retired from politics for a few years, but when he returned in 1920 to regain the presidency, he was defeated. He retired again to the United States, where he died in 1921, aged 65. Today, his son, Miguel Mariano Gomez, is president of Cuba. In the elder Gomez's honor, Cuba issued a set of two stamps recently.

Average Motor Vehicle Taxed $49 During Past Year

The average motor vehicle operator in the United States last year paid special automotive taxes aggregating $49.06, or 24 1-2 per cent on the value of his $200 car, figures compiled by the American Petroleum Industries Committee from official sources show. The amount paid was approximately one dollar per vehicle more than the average tax paid in 1934, the year before.

Gasoline taxes again constituted the largest item in the automotive tax budget, the average motor vehicle operator paying $30.10 through federal and state levies on motor fuel. Of this total, $23.53 on an average was paid to the state and $6.57 to the federal government.

Registration fees, drivers' licenses and similar fees amounted to $12.31, while federal excise taxes on lubricating oil, new automobiles and trucks, tires and tubes, parts and accessories, amounted to $3.85 more.

Although no accurate statistics are available on the amounts paid by motorists in personal property taxes and local levies of various kinds, the Committee estimated that they cost motorists $73,500,000, or $2.80 each.

Parole Conference Creating Little Interest In Texas

AUSTIN—Parole officials are preparing a program for the Southwest Parole Conference at Galveston in September with diffidence. There is one topic considered important, but they are hesitant about broaching it.

This is the problem offered by the release of men prisoners after a term of sex repression. W. W. Halcomb, supervisor for the state parole boards, admits that in a reaction from sex starvation many released men fall into companionship with women of loose morals and get into influences that hamper their efforts to reform.

A frank discussion of the situation would be welcomed by parole students, if anyone has the courage to tackle the topic in the conference.

Halcomb is noticeably proud of the record being made by the volunteer parole board of Texas. He believes they have solved one of the hardest problems that formerly faced released prisoners. If ex-convicts applied for positions, and revealed their prison record, they didn't get the jobs. If they concealed records, they were discharged for not telling. Under the volunteer parole board system the board members make the first contact with possible employers and give the ex-convict's history.

In money, Halcomb says, the system has saved the state hundreds of thousands of dollars. Albert Steves, head of the San Antonio board, estimated the saving in that county's paroled men at $100,000.

The cost of keeping the prisoner is only a small part of the saving. A typical case is that of an ex-convict employed so that he no longer remained a charge of the state, but was able to take off relief his mother and sister.

SEEKER OF "DIXIE BELLE" BRIDE GETS 13,000 PROPOSALS BEFORE TWO APPLICANTS COMPARE NOTES

OAKLAND, Cal.—Samuel Frank, who gained nationwide notoriety over night when he telegraphed Gov. James Alfred of Texas to help him find a Dixie belle for a bride, has run afoul the law.

In his appeal to Alfred, Frank held out as an inducement that if the Dixie belle who met all his stipulations, could be found in time, he would marry her in a public ceremony at the Texas Centennial.

Alfred played the part of Cupid by broadcasting the appeal to newspapers all over the country, and until the moment of arrest, Frank asserted he had received 13,000 letters of proposal. They filled four suitcases and two 40-pound cardboard cartons.

The requirements which Frank set for his Dixie bride were almost as numerous and complicated as the enticements which he held out on his own behalf.

He admitted that he was old-fashioned. He professed to have been a member of the Denver City Council, an athletic director in a Denver high school, a Baptist minister at Fort Worth and Denver, and said he was 6 feet tall and weighed 174 pounds.

Frank was also frank as regards his qualifications that might not be considered as enticements.

Smokes Corncob Pipe "My worst habit is smoking a corncob pipe, but I don't want a wife who smokes or drinks," he stipulated.

To offset the corncob pipe, however, he announced in his appeal that he was a war veteran and was getting veterans' compensation and a bonus.

He asked a prospect an answer questions like these: Was she single, divorced, or a widow? If divorced, was her divorce a Biblical one? What church did she belong to? Did she "dip" snuff? Did she believe in baptism by immersion? Did she drink or participate in wild parties?

Curious About Rouge He also wanted to know what sort of disposition the prospect had, if she danced, what sort of amusement she liked, and whether she objected to marrying a widower with two children (professing to have two himself). He also asked for details on the amount of rouge and lipstick she used, and finally requested a picture.

During the period that Frank was receiving hundreds upon hundreds of replies from prospects all over the country, he took the public a little into his confidence about some of the details.

Nearly all of the Dixie belles, for whom he had expressed a preference in his appeal to Alfred, showed enough of real Southern chivalry to enclose postage stamps for a reply, he said.

The California prospects were notably shy, however, in repaying postage.

However, among the 13,000 who replied was Mrs. Louise Kennedy of Berkeley, who had read Alfred's plea for Frank. She wrote him then went to see him personally in this city.

Segregation Is First Step To Bring Texas Prison System Up-To-Date

BY RICHARD M. MOREHEAD United Press Staff Correspondent HUNTSVILLE — Segregation is the first step in bringing Texas prisons up-to-date, workers now employed believe.

Segregation will prevent hardened criminals from teaching their philosophies and tricks to youngsters up for the first time. It will enable prison officials to help rehabilitate those whose future is not hopeless.

Moreover, it should lessen the outbreaks against discipline that have brought notoriety to Texas prisons in the past. Self-maiming, insurrections, discontent — these are the problems that must be solved within "the walls."

"Frankly, we don't know what makes inmates mutilate themselves," General Manager O. J. S. Ellington said recently. "We're studying the records to see if we can find out."

A recent uprising at one farm resulted in floggings for a dozen of the leaders. Among other reasons assigned for the outbreaks was one that "there isn't always enough warm water for shaving." Many times the discontent is caused by those serving their second or third sentence. During their first terms, comparatively easy jobs were given them. When they broke the law and came back, officials gave them more difficult jobs, under rules of the prison system.

The Texas system is well-constituted for segregation and classification, Frank Loveland, director in charge, said. The central unit at Huntsville is a receiving station for all incoming convicts. Here newcomers may be studied, examined and classified before being sent to one of the farms.

For several years the Huntsville prison has had excellent medical service, Loveland said. The new service entails use of a psychopathic ward which will be established in connection with the hospital. Many persons of a mental level that renders them harmless, if left alone, become dangerous when influenced by more intelligent criminals. They will be segregated as will the drug addicts, cripples, tuberculars, sex perverts, and other inform.

Plans for segregation were for four classes of convicts, considered of normal mentality. First are those classified as good-prospects for rehabilitation, who have no serious marks on their record and whose life history and personality indicate that they can adopt a normal mode of living after being released. This group will be subdivided to include inmates under 25 years of age and those above that age.

The second classification includes those which a question mark beside their chances to become normal citizens. Their records indicate some degree of criminality, but their outlook is "doubtful" rather than "hopeless." The third class includes all persistent offenders, not necessarily dangerous, but those whose records show little chance for rehabilitation.

The fourth class is made up of men hopelessly buried in crime. Many are vicious killers, with little regard for human life. Troublemakers inside "the walls" will be in the lowest ranks also, along with those having serious escape records.

After the records are compiled, provisions will be made for handling each convict according to his record.

As for the country's territories and dependencies, the General would let them all go, except the Canal Zone, which is necessary to defense, Hawaii and Alaska. The last two, he would not defend against armed invasion, but feels that the occasion would never arise, if the United States would announce to the world that it would use every economic pressure possible against any nation which might be tempted to attack them.

"Let's pass all suggested anti-war legislation," General Butler says; "let's attend all the peace and disarmament conferences; let's have all the war protest meetings we can arrange; let our young men form their 'veterans of future wars' groups—let's do all this and more. But if we really want to make it impossible to have our young men sent abroad to fight the wars of others, then let us by all means insist upon adding the Peace Amendment to the Constitution of the United States."
