GARRETT'S FRIENDS NOT AWED Congress Race Climax Seven Elections AT VICTORY OVER T. L. BLANTON

Friends of Clyde L. Garrett weren't surprised Saturday night at his apparent victory over Representative Thomas L. Blanton, veteran of many campaigns and 17th district congressional representative known nationally for his fieryness.

Garrett's friends have pointed all along to the fact that the Eastland county judge had been in seven campaigns and had each time come out on top.

Garrett was born 50 years ago in a log cabin that still stands near Gorman in Eastland county. His father, W. V. Garrett, a Confederate soldier wounded in a battle during the Civil War, was a county commissioner and justice of the peace for 25 years.

One of Clyde Garrett's first jobs was as a railroad section hand. He attended Hankins Training College at Gorman and later taught school. After teaching school he went into bookkeeping and insurance work.

Later Garrett served as a deputy in the county tax collector's office, the sheriff's office and the county clerk's office. Judge Garrett was elected county clerk in 1912 when he was 27. He was elected to that office three times. After the county clerk service,

FARLEY DENIES HE ENDORSED TOM BLANTON

An unexpected telegram, presumably sent to Abilene by national democratic chairman James A. Farley, endorsing the reelection candidacy of Rep. Thomas L. Blanton, provided excitement Saturday in the democratic runoff primary.

Blanton, a stormy figure in congress for 18 years, was opposed by Former County Judge Clyde L. Garrett of Eastland.

As voters in the 17th district balloted Saturday, Blanton demanded that the sender's signature on the telegram in Washington be checked, denying knowledge that the telegram was to be sent by Farley and insisting he had not solicited the national chairman's support.

The mystery telegram was received and printed by the Abilene Morning News. After it had been read at a Blanton rally in Abilene and Sweetwater Friday night.

NEW YORK, Aug. 22.—James A. Farley, chairman of the democratic national committee, today said neither he nor anyone connected with him had any part in sending a telegram purporting to give his support to Rep. Thomas L. Blanton in the runoff election against Judge Clyde Garrett.

Farley said flatly he knew nothing about the telegram until it was called to his attention Saturday.

"I left New York yesterday (Friday) at 4:30 p. m. and went to Hyde Park where I spent the evening with President Roosevelt. I know nothing about the telegram and nobody connected with me either secretaries in my office or anyone else had authority to send such a message, nor did they send it."

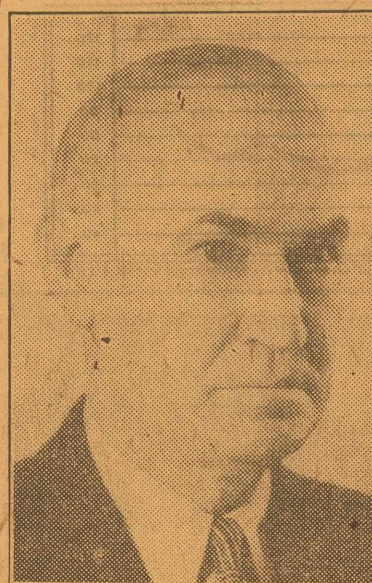

Farley reiterated strongly his policy of taking no sides in democratic primaries.

"I have not taken and will not take any part in senatorial or congressional democratic runoffs," he said.

ROCHESTER, Minn., Aug. 22.—Gov. Floyd Olson, former labor leader fighting for his life at Mayo Clinic, was refreshed today after "a good night."

BIG LEAD IS PILED UP BY EASTLAND MAN

Carries Blanton's County By 300 Votes and Loses But One County

With almost complete returns tabulated from all of the 12 counties of the 17th congressional district, County Judge Clyde L. Garrett was assured of election to congress Saturday night. Figures tabulated shortly before midnight from the 12 counties, seven complete, showed that Garrett had a total vote of 32,977 against 17,939 for Thomas L. Blanton, his opponent and congressman from the district for the past 18 years.

Counties which were completely completed were Comanche, Erath, Nolan, Palo Pinto, Shackelford, Stephens and Taylor.

A tabulation made at Abilene by the Abilene Morning News indicated that Blanton would likely carry only one county of the district, Shackelford, while he was running neck and neck with Garrett in Hamilton county.

Garrett carried Blanton's home county of Taylor by 300 votes while Garrett carried his own home county by 5,259 to 1,907 with only two small boxes to be heard from.

Ross Elected from 107th District By 338 Vote Majority

On the basis of complete returns from Callahan county all but two boxes—Tudor and Dothan—reported in Eastland county, T. L. (Tip) Ross was assured of election to the state legislature from the 107th electoral district including Eastland and Callahan counties.

The vote in the two counties was as follows:

Lotief carried Eastland county polling 3,749 votes, not counting the two missing boxes, while Callahan county he polled an even 800 votes, his total in the two counties being 4,549.

Ross polled 3,850 votes in Eastland county, while in Callahan he received a total of 1,527 votes, giving him a total of 4,877 votes in the two counties, of 338 vote more than his opponent.

Lions Are Winners; Robinson Takes the Championship Game

The Ranger Lions club eked out a 14 to 13 win over the Rotar club in the softball game between the two clubs at Municipal field Friday night.

After the Lions and Rotar played, Robinson Grocery defeated Caddo in another close game by a score of 9 to 7 to win the second half championship of the National League.

A three-game series between Robinson Grocery, National League winners, and Lone Star Gasoline American league winners, will begin Monday of this week, it was announced Saturday.

The winners of two out of three games in the second half playoffs will meet the winners of the first half in a five-game series starting on Monday, Aug. 31, with the winner of three out of the five games being presented a loving cup as the soft ball champions of Ranger.

It was announced that on such players who had participated in one or more regularly scheduled games of the teams could participate in the playoff series and those who had played on other teams would not be eligible to play on the "world's series" teams.

DIONNE RECORD BROKEN, BUT FIVE ARE DEAD

MENDON, Mo., Aug. 22.—The news that Mrs. Adeline Speichinger, 36 year old mother of 10 living children had given birth to sextuplets, 18 days ago, brought scores of visitors to this quiet rural community today.

Only one of the babies, a rosy-cheeked 10 pound girl, lived. Five others were stillborn and weighed less than a pound.

Dr. W. B. Lucas, 80-year-old country physician, who refused to be impressed by the feat that almost went Mrs. Dionne one better, said quietly:

"The five might have developed perfectly and survived had Mrs. Speichinger been in better health."

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Aug. 22.—The fate of Martin Moore, 22 year old negro hall boy charged with the brutal murder of Helen Clevenger, New York co-ed, was placed in the hands of a jury late today.

The state seeks to send Moore to death in North Carolina's lethal gas chamber. Defense attorneys pleaded for acquittal, saying Moore had an alibi and a confession he gave to officers was signed after a beating.

TAMING OF MISSISSIPPI STILL A BOON TO SOUTH

NEW ORLEANS, La.—One of the dramatic triumphs in the history of early American engineering was accomplished by James Buchanan Eads — who tamed the mighty Mississippi, made it do everything but jump through a loop, and calmed the rolling billows of a turbulent Gulf of Mexico.

Astor Burlesque Ends With Sane Decision

So the great Astor case has been settled at last. Miss Astor and Dr. Thorpe share part-time custody of the famous diary; in the interests of public sanity, one hopes that he hangs onto it like grim death and guards it as he would his life.

The whole dreary case was a mess from the start. The one ray of light in it was the fact that the judge, sharing the disgust felt by his fellow citizens, finally stepped in and peremptorily told the warring parties to work out a compromise.

The judge apparently realized something that neither Miss Astor nor Dr. Thorpe seemed to have any glimmering of; namely, that the important thing at issue was the question of the child's future.

If the lawsuit could not work out some means of safeguarding whatever the youngster's doting parents had left of her happiness and her chance to grow up to a normal, happy womanhood, it was worse than useless.

These persons had already been divorced. The court was hardly concerned with any trysts the ex-husband may have had with nurses, girl friends, or whatnot, or with any romantic moments whose ecstatic overtones the actress confided to her diary.

Those things may have made entertaining reading for the keyhole section of the public; but the community does of pay out its hard earned money in taxes to support legal arenas for the staging of Pier 6 grudge fights.

Yet that was precisely what the case became. Glancing at the day-by-day reports of the trial, it was very hard to believe that either the plaintiff or the defendant was thinking very much about the best interests of the little girl whom they had brought into the world.

They were out for blood, and there were times — a dozen or so every day, by a conservative estimate — when it looked as if any handful of mud would do if it only would stick to somebody's garments.

As the thing was going, who stood to gain by it? Not the litigants, certainly; at the rate they were showing each other up and showing themselves up, unconsciously, they were doing to the reputations things that will be a long time in the forgetting.

Not the general public; it could have gained the same result much more easily by sticking a feather down its throat.

And not, certainly not, the little girl over whom the law ostensibly was being waged.

The judge had the right idea, and his fellow jurists might profit by his example. For a judge is not put in charge of his court merely to be a referee over a brawl. He is there in the interests of the public as a whole; he is there, more plainly, to see that justice is done.

There is many a child custody case like this one which ought to be choked off very quickly.

One thing more. The judge gets the diary. Since he lives in southern California he may not have a furnace in his house, but he must have at least a fireplace; and we hope that he builds a hot fire in it, lays the diary on top of the burning logs, and lets Nature take its course.

After a bystander pulled a gun, King Edward rode on calmly. But anyone who would keep on riding a horse, after his experiences, wouldn't mind a mere bullet.

We were wondering about the silence out of Italy lately, until we realized that since Mussolini fired the three bullets from the cabinet, they probably aren't talking.

Things certainly have changed. Scientists now reveal ants live riotously, and western farmers are learning that grasshoppers are not exactly shiftless.

In recently ordering "walking fish" from the tropics, America was a bit premature. Fish in what were mid-western lakes soon will get the knack.

This map represents business conditions in every state of the Union as shown in September, 1936, issue of "Nation's Business" official publication of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

July showed little of the traditional mid-summer slackening in trade, industry or speculation, despite the heat and drought. Some rain fell but too little to save some wheat and oats and much corn.

Private crop estimates, except of cotton, ended lower. Food prices responded sympathetically. Wheat early passed $1 in all markets, and Chicago corn futures reached that mark July 31.

Industry continued active, steel and its products leading with output at about the year's peak. Automobile production surpassed expectations. Electric power output made new records. Lumber production and shipments gained, reflecting expanded building which surpassed 1935 by 80 per cent and was the largest since 1931. More freight cars were on order on July 1 than at that date since 1929. Mining was active.

Carloadings were only slightly below the peak of last October. Furniture trade reports were good. Cotton mills were active. Copper buying was heavy.

The Map A slight shading of surplus grain crop areas but a similarly small brightening in industrial sections seems indicated as of August 1.

Garrett Attributes Loyalty of His Friends for Congress Race Victory

County Judge Clyde L. Garrett, who was elected to congress from the 17th congressional district, Saturday night issued the following statement:

"I am deeply grateful for the overwhelming majority which my friends have made possible by their work and loyalty in the runoff campaign.

"I have learned the value of friends and what their loyalty means to a man. The people of this district have shown a faith in me which is deeply appreciated and which I shall endeavor to merit by the work and service I shall strive to render them.

"This majority of 15,000 votes overwhelms me with gratitude and in humbleness of spirit and a deep abiding faith in the goodness of my fellowman, I approach my new task with a willingness of spirit and a strong determination to render the best service within my power to all the people of this congressional district and the nation.

"Toward those who did not see fit to support me in this race I hold no ill feeling, but pledge my friendship and best efforts to serving them as well as my most loyal supporters.

"My heart is filled with gratitude to each and everyone who contributed in any way to my victory. It is your victory as well as mine."

Americans Are Stuck In Mexico By Landslides

By United Press MEXICO CITY, Aug. 22. — Five hundred Americans are marooned in the Villa Juarez, with food getting scarce because of floods and landslides on the Pan-American highway from the Texas border to Mexico City, it was reported here today.

An American named Ross telephoned to Mexico City from Villa Juarez, about 170 miles south of the United States border, reporting the plight of the Americans.

ed into the secrets of engineering books between chores, who later took a job as purser on a river steamboat, He, at that time, was head of a steamboat wrecking organization. Eads let them recover from the original shock and then set their astonished tongues wagging again with:

"If I succeed in my plan, you are to pay me the sum total of $10,000,000; but, if I fail you dont owe me a red cent."

Folks up in St. Louis swore by Eads because he had constructed a 520-foot span over the Mississippi there after 28 of the country's leading civil engineers have deplored the impossibility of such a feat; New Orleans, on the other hand, swore by the proposed canal because of its advisability by state engineers; everybody joined in swearing at Eads for proposing "ridiculous" jetties — structures extending into the water used as a pier, or mole, to direct currents in a stream—for the powerful Mississippi.

Nobody but James Buchanan Eads seemed to think that the Mississippi wild, rampaging activities could be harnessed — even with "Eads' jetties." A board of engineers, created to study the navigation problem, accepted the jetty principle and offered Eads $5,250,000, plus $100,000 annually for 20-years maintenance in return for a 30-foot channel in the South Pass. The board, laughing up its sleeve at their Scotch joke, estimated privately that the work would cost a minimum of $7,942,110.

"Take it or leave it," the Board dared when Eads pleaded for a more considerable offer. Eads took it, while such notabilities as Major C. W. Howell, noted Army engineer, asserted that the plan would be unsuccessful.

Eads drove his men incessantly to solve the problem of controlling the largest volume of water ever completely man-handled. By July, 1879, South Pass had a channel of nearly 31 feet in depth throughout its entire length. Moreover, Eads had deepened the potent Gulf of Mexico beyond the bar.

Into the creation of the jetties had gone 616,226 cubic yards of willow mattresses; 13,000,000 board feet of lumber; 99,826 cubic yards of concrete and rock, and artificial banks much stronger than those Mother Nature had provided. The jetties were at last complete—as immobile as the sturdy Rock of Gibraltar.

The great day for Eads dawned October 31, 1879, as the steamer, Bristow, drawing 24 1/2 feet of water, boomed through South Pass, pushed upstream carrying news that James Buchanan Eads with his "ridiculous" jetties had tamed the mighty Mississippi, made it all but jump through a loop.

Legionnaires and the Story of Their World War Experiences

Private Charles B. Osteen, Company B, 113th Machine Gun Battalion, 30th Division, Murfreesboro, Tennessee, July, 1917.

CHARLES BYRON OSTEEN

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the twenty-first of a series of World War biographies being written by B. H. Peacock, commander of the American Legion Post of Ranger, covering the war-time experiences of members of the local post.

"My big moment," recalled C. B. Osteen of 810 Walnut Street, Ranger, Texas, "happened on September 30, 1918, just after the Allies had advanced and captured the famous Hindenburg Line. The first aid station of the 117th Infantry Brigade was located in one of the trenches of the line, and up and down it in both directions one could witness the hundreds of wounded as they were brought in. Shortly I noticed that Sergeant Fry and one of his men were bringing in one of my own buddies. Upon learning that he was not too dangerously wounded I proceeded to appease a rather pent up appetite by seating myself on the ground and preparing further for 'action' by placing my mess kit in my lap. Hardly had I done so when one of Heinie's pieces of shrapnel passed entirely through the kit and between my legs into the ground."

One chapter would not begin to contain all of the exciting moments and other incidents which packed themselves into the life of Private C. B. Osteen of the 113th Machine Gun Battalion of the 30th Division. From the very day that this Tennessee youth took the oath of allegiance to the flag under which he was to serve, things began to happen.

Charles Byron Osteen was one of eight children in the family of Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Osteen of Unionville, Tennessee. On July 10, 1917, he had reached the promising age of 21 years; had completed a year in Cumberland University; and was then in attendance at the State Normal College at Murfreesboro. But the War Department was calling for machine gunners, and hence the organization of a company of volunteers of the 2nd Tennessee Infantry under the command of Captain T. Y. English. And so it was from class room to barracks for young Osteen, and in the short space of a few weeks his company had left its original domicile in one of the college dormitories. Upon becoming federalized, it became a unit of the 30th Division, and was thereafter known as Company B, 113th Machine Gun Battalion, and stationed at Camp Sevier near Greenville, South Carolina.

"I will always remember the winter of 1917-18," recalled Osteen. "Snow remained on the ground from January to March, and quite a few of us were engaged in cutting and otherwise securing wood for fuel purposes." An oddity of that winter's experience also remains entrenched in his memory. On one occasion during the course of a heavy snow and thunder storm, a bolt of lightning struck the tent in which Osteen was standing, and knocked him to the floor. Though stunned for the time being, he later regained his original composure and was virtually none the worse for the experience.

The training which Private Osteen and his buddies received in the art of machine gunnery was typical of that given thousands of doughboys who elected this branch of the service. Among other things, it consisted in the care and operation of several types of machine guns in use during that time. Two of the principal ones were the Browning and the Lewis, and later, in France, the famous English Vickers. Field practice, according to Osteen, consisted of both direct and indirect firing. In indirect firing the gunner could not see his target, but manipulated his machine to the proper slope and angle in keeping with both the wind and the estimated distance. "And one specific and positive requirement," stated Osteen, "was that every man must qualify in assembling and dis-assembling his machine gun in the dark in a specified time limit. And that was no easy task when it was found that each gun contained over two hundred separate and distinct parts." The English Vickers, according to Osteen, was much like the German gun, in that it stood up on a similar type of tripod and used the same calibre of ammunition.

After some ten months of training with the machine gun, the rifle, and the general school of the soldier, Private Osteen and his buddies of the 30th sailed from Camp Mills on May 17, 1918, for "Somewhere in France." The transport H.M.S. Britain, which was a converted cattle boat, was the conveyance which fell to the lot of Company B. Eleven other transports and two battleships completed the convoy. The usual sailing time of some fourteen days found the outfit landing at Liverpool, England, instead of somewhere in France. The train carried them thence to the English city of Dover, where they spent the night in a bomb-proof retreat underground below an old fort. The following day found these doughboys crossing the channel and landing at the French port of Calais. It was here that the boys of the 30th contacted their first foreign troops, who happened to be some of the famous Scotch Highlanders, uniformed in their quaint plaid kilts.

After three days at Calais, the 30th was transferred about thirty miles inland, where they were formally attached to the English Army for further training and ultimate action in the lines.

The 10th day of July, 1918, will long live in the memory of Private Osteen. For on this occasion Company B was ordered into the front lines for training purposes in the famous Ypres sector. "It was here," reminisced Osteen, "that the hundreds of Canadians from America were first gassed by the Germans. At that time they knew practically nothing of gas warfare, and the dreadful slaughter by the Germans was terrible. And also, here at Ypres and at Kimmel Hill some of the stiffest fighting of the entire war took place."

"One of the most beautiful sights that I have ever seen," recalled Osteen, "was on the occasion of a barrage at midnight. At this particular time the night was very dark, and the flares of the many guns along the front, coupled with the S. O. S. signal flares of the Germans, made a scene never to be forgotten."

A wonderful opportunity presented itself to Private Osteen while on the Ypres front, to become thoroughly acquainted with his English Tommie buddies. For six days and nights, Osteen was the lone doughboy detailed with seven English Tommies in one of their "pill boxes," or observation posts. During the occasion of this six day lookout it fell to Osteen's lot to spot a German ammunition dump and report it to headquarters. In about ten minutes the Scotch artillery to the rear had spotted it and blown it up.

After having received the preliminary training, the division was ordered to the rear at the little city of Watou in Belgium. Osteen recalls that a little branch divided the camp, a portion of which rested in Belgium and the other portion in France.

Air fighting between the Allies and the Central powers became on the increase in this sector. On one occasion, Private Osteen witnessed the shooting down of a German bombing plane by the English. It was the practice of the Germans to drop one or two bombs into the town every night. The situation was finally so uncomfortable for Osteen and several of his buddies that they took refuge during the nights in a hay-stack in the countryside. Osteen also recalls that during their spare hours while at Watou that he and several of the doughboys assisted the Belgian farmer folk in the gathering and harvesting of their wheat.

On about September 1st, the outfit, together with Private Osteen, left by train (40 and 8) for the Somme front. De-training at Tincourt, they remained in reserve to September 27th, when the sector was taken over. It was on this sector that the 27th and 30th Divisions were placed in conjunction with the English forces.

On the morning of the 30th of September, just as the first ray of light broke over the eastern horizon, the boys went over the top. Artillery of every description, big and small, far and near, opened up. Much resistance was offered by the Germans of this sector, but nevertheless the objective some six miles distant was reached. Several men were lost out of Company B, among whom were four out of the squad of eight in which Osteen was detailed. According to Osteen, a shell hit in the center of the group, killing two of them and dangerously wounding two others. The adeptness of Private Osteen in "hitting the dirt" evidently owes to him his life. After reaching their objective and taking the famous Hindenburg Line, they remained for a period of some eight days, with only "iron rations" and rations from dead soldiers for their only sustenance.

On about October 10th, the division was relieved for a few days. Directly thereafter, they returned to the lines and made an advance against stubborn resistance of some 17 miles. Two towns were captured, together with many prisoners and quite a number of machine guns and pieces of artillery. This became known as the Lassele River drive, during which heavy casualties were suffered by the division.

Having suffered so heavily, the division was ordered out of the lines for replacements, and encamped near Amiens. The Armistice came shortly, however, after which the 30th Division was transferred back to the American Army and sent to a point near Le Mons. In February of 1919 they were transferred to the main forwarding camp at Le Mons awaiting orders to embark for home.

Christmas of 1918 was fairly quiet for Osteen and his buddies. Leaves secured after the Armistice brightened up the waiting period, however. Paris and the resort city of St. Marlo, as well as several historical points were visited by Osteen and others of his outfit. A slight touch of the dreaded mustard gas was experienced by this soldier the first night he went into the lines in Belgium. And so it was that Osteen, otherwise unscathed, embarked from St. Nazaire on the 18th of March on the U. S. S. Huron for America and home. With him, naturally, came thousands of others of his outfit. They disembarked, after a rather uneventful voyage, at Charleston South Carolina. From thence they were directed to Camp Jackson, and finally to Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, where on April 12, 1919, Company B was disbanded and honorably discharged from the service.

Back in civilian clothes after some two years in the uniform, Mr. Osteen, after a short visit with home folks, secured employment with the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company in Akron, Ohio. In the latter part of 1919 the call of the famous Ranger oil field took him to Eastland County and to Ranger. A brother had already preceded him to the new boom town, and together they entered the teaming contracting business. In July, 1920, Mr. Osteen accepted an appointment with the Ranger postoffice, with which connection he has continued to the present writing.

Miss Janie Parsons of Unionville, Tennessee, was the lady of his choice, and on June 5, 1921, they were married. Charles Osteen, the only child born to this union, is now eleven years of age, and promises to grow into splendid young manhood.

Carl Barnes Post of the American Legion, of Ranger, takes pride in the affiliation of Buddy Osteen, and likewise the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Masonic lodge honors him as a man and as a citizen.

"To have been a good soldier, and to have fought a good fight" is no mean honor. And to volunteer and offer all on the altar of one's country is no mean undertaking.
