Cleveland Makes Fine Impression On First Sunday

By REV. L. B. GRAY

"The Little White Church on the Hill," better known as the First Presbyterian, is delighted with the revival beginning made for a revival on yesterday. Rev. J. L. Cleveland preached two very fine sermons. His earnest Gospel messages, simple, even for the children, touched the hearts of all who heard. People listened—you could have heard a pin drop, and went away thoughtful and quiet. They were helped to get nearer to the Savior. His occasional humorous sallies and pungent remarks brought smiles and laughter. He tried to give away a Testament at the Sunday School and presented it to the youngest couple at the evening service. Young people also received tracts, etc., which were helpful. Mr. Cleveland believes in the Bible and preaches it. He believes in vital, living Christianity, not just a profession. His morning sermon on "What is a Christian?" defined the most important issue of life. A Christian is a believer in the Bible, in God, in Christ, and out of that belief there is salvation from sin, and a life of righteousness and true holiness. It is the same story, but told in such a unique way that people are made to want it. The evening sermon continued in the same way. Be a Christian, in your daily living, and get others to follow the Master; get out of the area of sinful living, and into the glorious realms of light and joy and usefulness.

Come to the choir. We need your singing voice. Services tonight at 7:30 p. m., and every night this week, except Saturday. The house may be small, but there is room for all. Come, and bring your friends. The simple Gospel will be presented, with nothing to mar the delightful harmony existing among the churches of the town.

Surgery Gives Baby His Cry

A baby who COULDN'T CRY! What a boon, chorus parents who stumble forth in dead of night to still infantile yowls! But the mother of 13-month-old Eugene Grego missed the usual rumpus, so Eugene went to a Pittsburgh hospital. There a surgeon found a larynx obstruction and remedied it, so here Eugene is shown apparently ready to try out his newly acquired wail.

His competitors, Dorothy Kilgallen of the New York Journal and Leo Kieran of the New York Times, still were in Manila today, but hoped to get away soon for San Francisco.

Ekins defeated them by a margin of 10,000 miles and six days travel time.

REBELS CLAIM MADRID'S FALL WILL BE SOON

By United Press

Spanish nationalists leaders said today the battle of Madrid is all but over and they could enter the capitol whenever they liked.

As they laid claim to victory Madrid massed thousands of green militiamen at the final defense lines on the highway. Admittedly their situation was desperate.

Nationalists withdrew an assertion that they had struck the railroad from Madrid to the East coast, but the government feared a successful attack might be made on it at any time.

Car Registrations Show a Decline

AUSTIN, Texas.—New passenger car registrations in thirteen representative Texas counties during September, totaled 4,364, a decline of 14.6 per cent from August but an increase of 41.9 per cent over September last year, according to the University of Texas Bureau of Business Research.

Sales during the first nine months of the year in these thirteen counties totaled 51,642 cars, an increase of 21.8 per cent over the corresponding period a year ago.

The change-over to the 1937 models by a number of car builders' doubtless accounts for the decline in sales from August to September, the Bureau's report stated. Unusually large back orders announced by several companies should soon be reflected in expanding registrations, the bureau added.

AUSTIN, Texas.— Vocational and industrial education leaders from all parts of the United States and from Canada, Mexico, Porto Rico, Hawaii, Alaska, and the Philippine Islands are expected to attend the meeting of the American Vocational Association in San Antonio, December 15, according to Miss Laura Murray, chief of the University of Texas Bureau of Industrial Teaching-Training, who is a member of the state committee in charge of arrangements for the convention. Special Venire of 140 Ordered For Murder Trial of Mrs. Raymond Henry

A special venire of 140 men from which will be chosen a jury for the Nov. 2 trial of Mrs. Raymond Henry on a charge of slaying her former husband, H. L. McBee, 42, was ordered Monday by B. W. Patterson, judge of 88th district court.

The venire was ordered on motion of Criminal District Attorney Grady Owen. The venire will be drawn from the jury panel for the November term of the court.

Raymond Henry, 25, husband of Mrs. Henry, was assessed a 50-year sentence April 5 on his conviction of slaying McBee.

Lynn Smith, 29, is accused as an accessory in the case.

The state charged Henry with stabbing McBee, a highway worker, at Rising Star May 1, 1933 and that the body was buried, exhumed three weeks later and hung from a tree to give the appearance of suicide.

Motor Without a Crankshaft Made

By United Press

PUEBLO, Colo.—An airplane motor without crankshaft, valves or carburetor, which burns ordinary gasoline and follows other general principles of internal combustion engines, has been invented and patented by W. H. Smith after 10 years' experimentation. The engine was created to overcome lost energy used by ordinary motors in keeping themselves running.

The engine has eight cylinders, each fired four times per revolution of the engine, making 32 strokes per revolution. Ordinary automobiles engines have one power stroke for every two revolutions.

The engine revolves in its casing, eliminating the necessity of a crankshaft. When completed the engine will produce 10,000 to 15,000 revolutions a minute, Smith believes, or 4,000 revolutions a minute under load.

The entire engine is to be made of aluminum to conserve weight, and will produce as high as 15 horsepower per pound of weight, Smith believes. Vanes built into the engine casing itself are designed to create a cooling system.

The engine, designed principally for planes, will serve as its own gyroscope as it revolves with the propeller, thus eliminating automatic pilots or anti-sway devices, according to Smith.

ALLRED SILENT ON CHANGES IN PENSION ACT

By United Press

AUSTIN, Oct. 19.—Gov. Allred remained silent today on action taken by the Texas senate restricting old age assistance. He said he approved the plan to place administration under the board of control.

"I urged placing of the administration under the board of control when the commission was created," Allred said. "The main object is to get the entire setup as far removed from petty politics as possible."

AUSTIN, Oct. 19.—A bill levying three and one-quarter cents a barrel tax on oil today passed the house of representatives by a vote of 84 to 42.

The bill provides that pumping wells producing less than 10 barrels a day are taxed two cents a barrel.

The bill was adopted without debate. Stormy debate had marked previous discussion. As originally introduced the bill placed the tax at 10 cents a barrel.

The omnibus tax bill passed by the house and now before the senate, taxes oil two and three-quarter cents a barrel. If adopted, the "Single Shot" bill will take precedent over the omnibus bill.

NEW DEAL IS WINNER OF A COURT TEST

By United Press

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19.—The New Deal won preliminary tests involving the 1933 "truth in securities" law and its municipal power loan policy today in cases appealed to the supreme court.

The high court refused to entertain cases involving these measures.

The securities act test was brought by Edward Jones, New York oil promoter, who last year won a victory in a fight against the securities and exchange acts.

In the other case two power firms, one the Texas Utilities Company, challenged the right of PWA administrator Harold Ickes to make power loans.

The court also was asked to add a test of the new social securities act to its program when Edward McLennan, Boston attorney, sought to intervene as a "Friend of the Court" in three New York state insurance law cases soon to be argued.

The court took no action on McLennan's surprise move. It merely allowed him permission to file a motion asking that the court consider the federal social security act.

Alcazar Siege Reveals Man's Innate Heroism

Whatever we may think about the rights or wrongs of the struggle in Spain, all of us can at least recognize dogged human heroism when we see it.

And as the correspondents at last pick their way over the ruins of the Alcazar fortress in Toledo and tell what they saw there, we have to realize that here, once more, has been retold the great story of the way ordinary human beings can set their teeth and take a beating.

There are times when life suddenly turns into a melodrama; when men are thrust into positions where there is nothing to do but to hang on tight and take the worst that can happen in the way of pain, hardship, danger and death.

Their lives resolve themselves into a struggle between the human spirit and the gathering darkness; and as the struggle goes ahead we suddenly discover that death is only an incidental thing, that to endure and to be dauntless is to win a victory that defeat and the grave cannot affect.

So it was with the English at Lucknow, with the Texans at the Alamo, with the Light Brigade at Balacava, and with Lee's exhausted army at Petersburg; and so, too, it seems to have been with the rebels in the Alcazar.

Eleven hundred fighting men went into the Alcazar. When the rebel troops finally fought their way into Toledo and raised the siege, 90 of these men had died, 580 had been more or less seriously wounded, and 57 had vanished.

There had been 520 women in the place when the siege started. Two died and nine were wounded; two gave birth to children during the fighting.

The defenders had a quantity of grain, 97 horses and 27 mules, and a chest of medical supplies when the siege started. When it ended, one horse and five mules remained (the rest had been eaten), and the doctors had one bottle of chloroform and one bottle of alcohol left of their supplies.

During the siege the assailants rained 8500 shells and 4000 bombs and grenades on the castle. They made eight direct attacks on it, raided it by air 30 times, threw 200 jars of inflammable liquid into it, and set it afire 10 times.

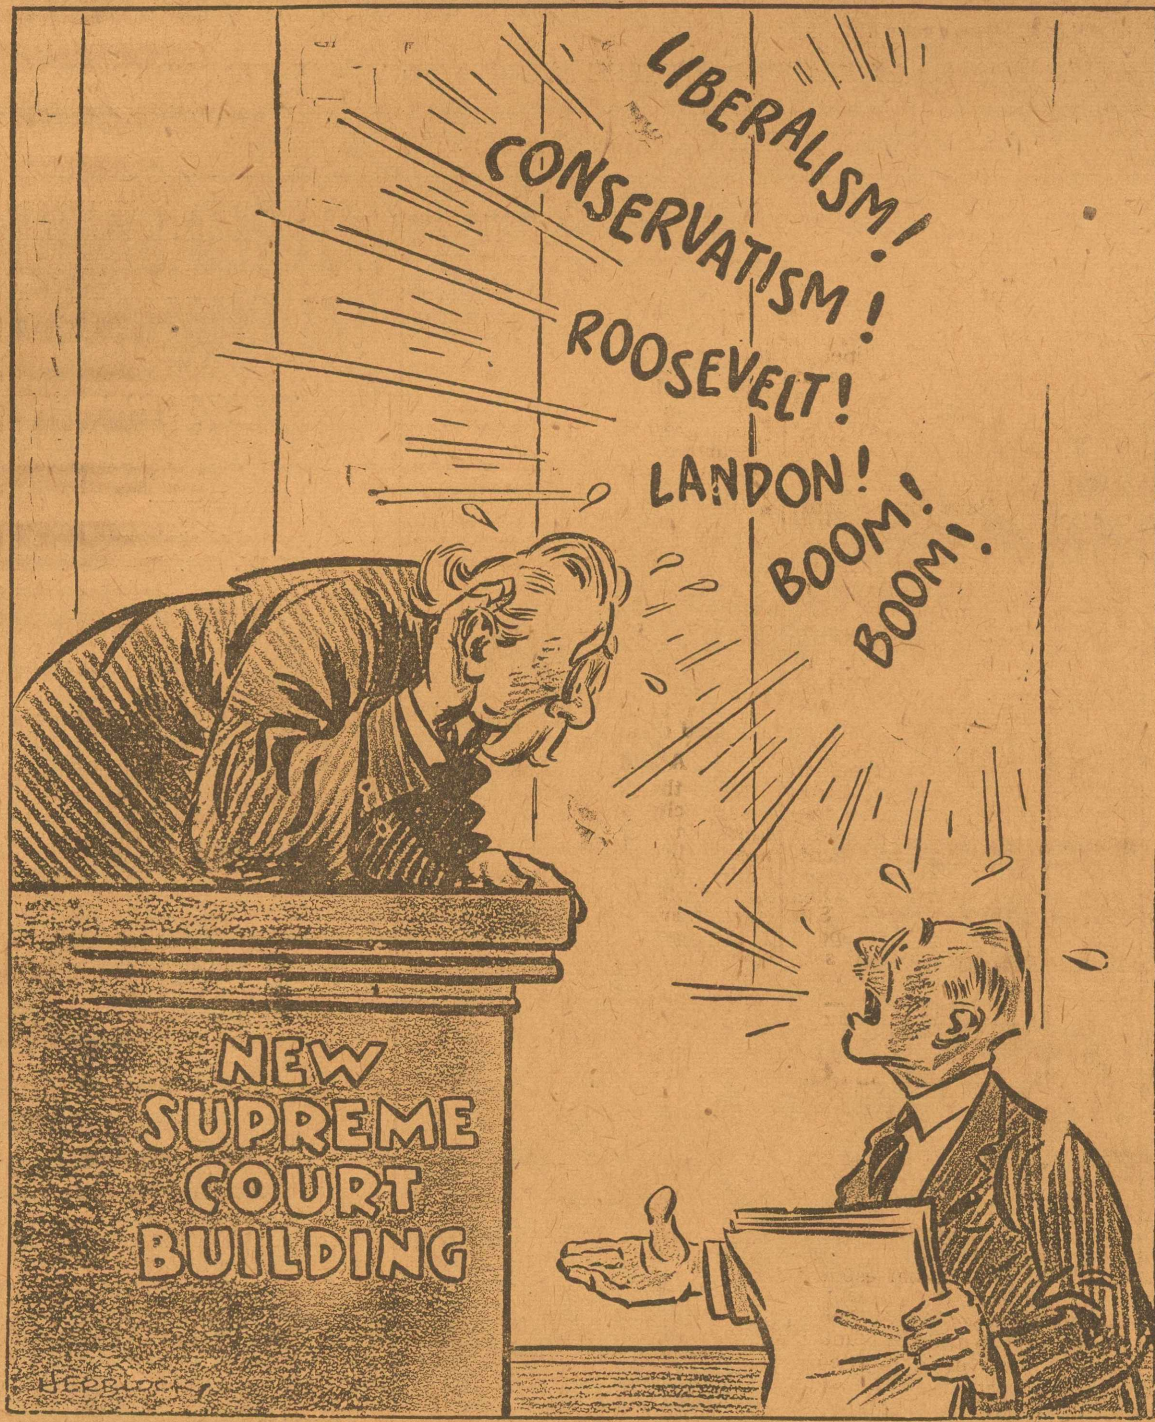

For 71 days the defenders had crouched in underground cells and burrows, fighting and sleeping and eating and fighting again in a dreary, heart-breaking, endlessly monotonous round.

Those statistics sound dead and dry, when you write them down. But they do give us the outlines of an epic of endurance and solid, undramatic courage which deserves to be remembered.

For struggles like this one tell us more about the spirit of man than a whole volume of ordinary annals. They remind us that there is something utterly unconquerable in this blind, selfish, and frequently ignoble descendant of the angels; that he can, on occasion, look death in the eye without trembling, fight in the dark without aqua, and hang on grimly when the last shadow of hope seems to be gone.

With all his faults, he can be a great guy when the pinch comes. Can we learn that lesson too often?

Delort claims goes back farther to the Bronze Age. This tomb contained beautifully engraved pins, almost 15 inches in length, bracelets, collars, curving vases of different sizes, a bronze knife and various large pieces of quartz.

Further excavations in the forest of Charleville-sou-Bois revealed a more ancient tomb which

After two days of excavation, Delort reached a wide cinder bed and under this found the first tomb. Inside he found two black vases, one fitted into the other, a sword attached to two copper rings, which were formerly slipped on the belt of the warrior, and one long spear.

ONE good dish will save M.M. day. From breakfast until 'lights out,' the "blue" appetite likes surprises. Curried pineapple with the roast of lamb—simple enough but certainly unexpected. To make the curried pineapple, use a large can of sliced pineapple. Cut into cubes. Arrange in shallow baking dish. Pour in a little of the pineapple juice, sprinkle with 1-2 tablespoons curry powder and 2 tablespoons brown sugar. Dot with 2 tablespoons butter. Bake for 1-2 hours, until the pineapple, sugar, butter and curry powder have got together in a thick and pungent fellowship. They will do wonders to the taste of lamb.

Behind the Scenes in Washington

By RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON—That more or less comic episode wherein Landon and Roosevelt scrambled to get credit for original proposal of crop insurance has some previously unexplained background. You will recall that on Sunday, Sept. 20, Roosevelt appointed a committee to study crop insurance. The next day Landon hastened to announce that he had decided, several days before, to favor crop insurance, and to prove it, gave out two paragraphs of the speech he was to make in Des Moines the following night.
Well, just to show you the way things go, Roosevelt some three weeks previously had decided to come out for crop insurance—or for a study of it—in the "fireside talk" he delivered the night of Sept. 6. He changed his mind.
Nearly all the notable New Dealers, it seems, were in on the writing of that talk. Everybody had ideas. At one time the speech was to be mostly about unemployment. At least one "final draft" was torn up and completely replaced.
AMONG the conferees was Ambassador Bill Bullitt—formerly to Russia, now to France. Bullitt talked crop insurance right out of the speech. He argued that it was just another half-baked idea that wouldn't work.
Roosevelt dropped it—for a while. Why he picked it up again isn't certain.
Republicans think the Democratic espionage service, which seems to be at least as good as the G. O. P.'s, reported that Landon would endorse it in Des Moines. Or it may be that Secre-

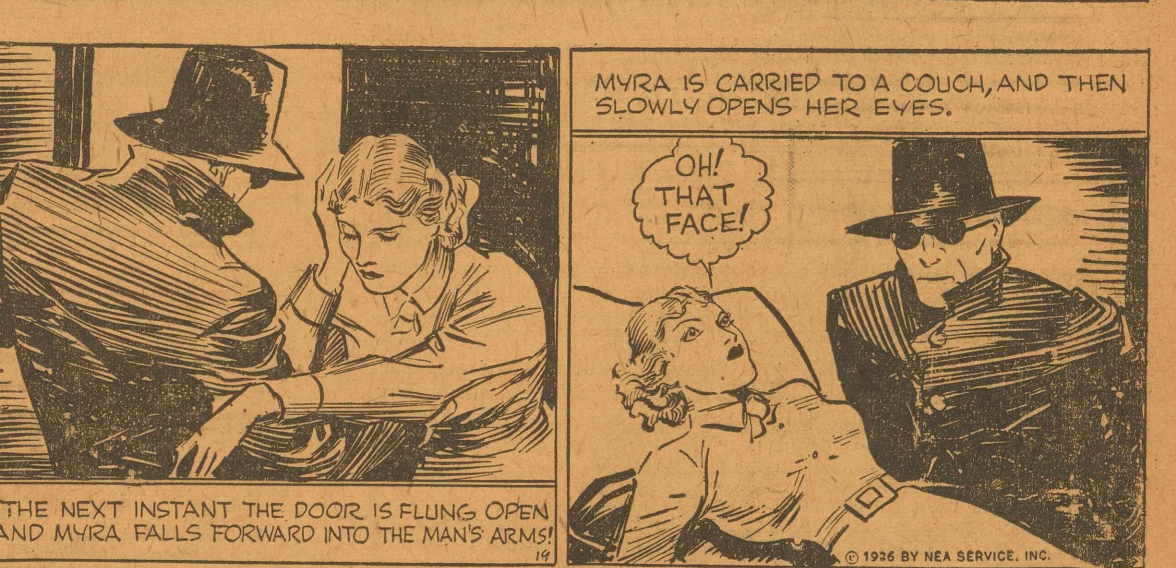

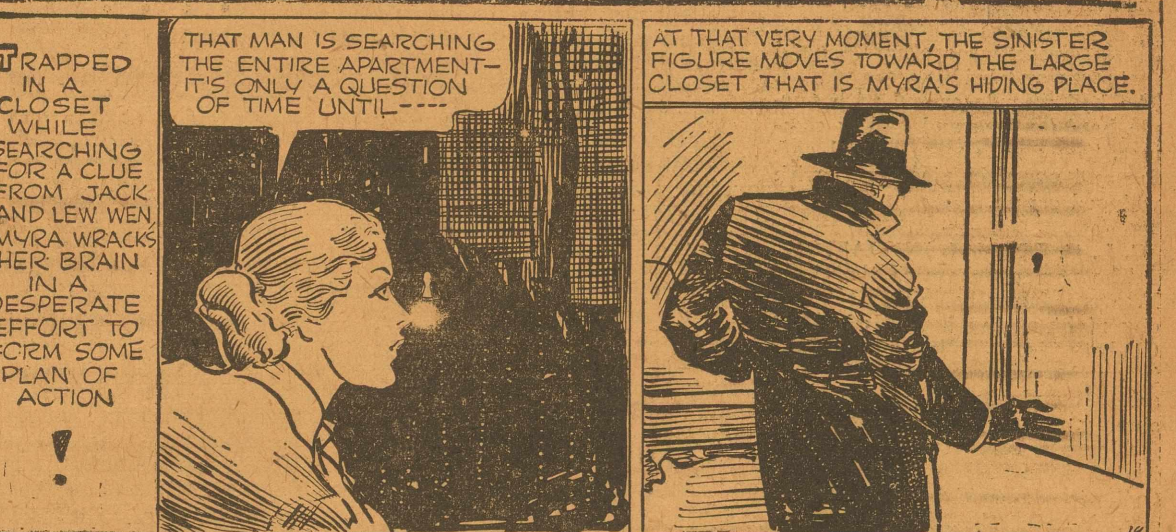

Sport Glances. By Grayson

NEW YORK—The Yankees should have won the world series in five games.
That the Giants won the fifth was not so much a tribute to the courageous pitching of Hal Schumacher as it was an indictment of Joe McCarthy and the general loose strategic system in the American League, where the custom is to play for runs in groups, instead of concentrating on one important factor of getting the winning or tying run in scoring position.
Baseball veterans, including this writer, were amazed at McCarthy's stupidity in the tenth and final inning of the fifth game.
Bill Dickey, slower than the story book freight of his native Arkansas, opened with a single. Obviously the situation called for a sacrifice and a pinch runner. It was the Yankees' last crack. The Giants led, 5-4. Did McCarthy send in a pinch runner for the leaden-footed Dickey? He did not!
Did McCarthy order George Selkirk to sacrifice? He did not! Selkirk hit straight away and succeeded in raising an enormous pop fly to Gus Mantuso.
THEN, with Jake Powell at bat, McCarthy must have sensed that something was wrong. Or maybe somebody told him. At any rate he suddenly remembered that Dickey, who has been with the Ruppert Rifics only since 1931, was slower than the entire New York National League ball club of 1936 which has established something in the way of a record for standing in one place for a protracted period.
In treating with Texas without authority, the Guadalupe-Hidalgo treaty of 1848, at the close of the United States-Mexico war, was followed by a dispute as to the exact territory ceded, resulting in the Gadsden Purchase of 1853, for a consideration of $16,800,000, which definitely added to the United States the area of Arizona, New Mexico, Utah, Ne-

BEGIN HERE TODAY
KATE and CAROLINE MEED live on a Blue Grass farm with their grandfather, MAJOR SAM MEED, and two old Negro servants, ALTHY and ZEKE. Kate is engaged to handsome MORGAN PRENTISS, who neglects her for EVE ELWELL, beautiful and wealthy.
Major Meed has mortgaged the farm and the mortgage is foreclosed by JEFF HOWARD, a bitter young mountaineer, who decides to settle among the Blue Grass people he hates.
As the Meeds are packing, Kate encounters Jeff and treats him rudely. He responds with insolence. The Meeds move into a dilapidated tenement house and Morgan Prentiss sends Kate three dozen roses. Having no vase, Kate has to put them in a milk can on the back porch. Morgan comes to cut, sees the roses in the milk can and is selfishly offended.
NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
CHAPTER X
JEFF HOWARD paid his landlady, gave directions for the forwarding of his trunks and boxes, got into his car and drove away.
He was on the way to the Blue Grass farm that was to be his home. One day during the past week he had visited the place, and that brief visit, punctuated by the insolence of a bronze-haired girl, had whetted his appetite for complete possession.
He arrived before noon and drove his long, noiseless roadster into a lane that led to the barn. In the yard near a side porch he could see two wagons being loaded; he would wait. Very quietly he made his way to the barn.
The emptiness of the big stable affected him queerly. All the things that usually encumbered a place were gone—ropes, halters, saddles and bridles, hay, pitchforks, curry combs, even hoes' nests were absent. Yet two horses remained in their stalls, tied by halters to the mangers. Jeff went near and looked at them. By the lean, sinuous build of them he knew them to be riding horses.
At that moment a small Negro boy of uncertain age entered the stable and approached the stalls. Seeing the tall stranger there, he stopped in his tracks to stare at him.
"Nice horses," remarked Jeff. "Who do they belong to?"
"Black horse Miss C'line's. Big un's Miss Kate's."
JEFF HOWARD cleared his throat and asked another question. "Is Miss Kate the tall girl with the reddish or'lored hair?"
"Tis," the boy answered, and led the horses away.
Jeff Howard stood in the empty stable with his hands in his pockets and a derisive smile on his lips, unconscious of the grace of his big lean body as he struck a pose which would have delighted a sculptor. "Kate!" he said aloud. Well, he knew her name now. Kate. It rhymed with hate.
Couldn't be better. Shakespeare's shrew—Kate.
He went out of the deserted barn by the rear door and walked across a pasture and a cornfield. He walked until, turning to look back, he could no longer see the house. He came on two turkey hens wandering among scrub oaks, and beyond he found some graves enclosed in an iron fence.
He climbed the fence that surrounded the little burying ground and stooped to read what was on a granite tombstone there. "Julius Meed," he read. And below it, "Beloved and faithful body-servant to Crittenden Meed. An example" to his fellow-slaves, an inspiration to his master. Born April 2, 1802. Died Easter Sunday, 1862."
Jeff Howard stood upright and looked down at the grave. . . . So some of the Blue Grass people were decent to their slaves, eh? Loved them even. Gave them the family name. Buried them with eulogies. He looked further and saw that all the stones marked the graves of slaves. Yet to this day the plot was kept inviolate. Even neat.
He climbed over the iron fence and walked toward the house, irritated and ruffled to find this proof of humanity among those proud first families who had ruled his state.
AS he approached the house he saw that two shabby cars were driving off. His far-sighted eyes informed him that the old man and the small blond girl were in the sedan. It was the girl who had said, "Good morning, Mr. Howard," when he encountered her in the yard last week. Not friendly, exactly. But not mean, either.
In the smaller car the tall girl sat. He could see the sunlight burnish her hair.
They were hardly out of sight when the old Negro man came to bring him the keys. After that the wagons drove off also, and he was free to enter the house.
Jeff walked through the rooms and told himself that they were his. His! They were more impressive than he had realized. The ceilings were higher. The furniture was handsomer. . . .
He would use the downstairs bedroom for his own, he decided. The room that had been the old man's. It held a great square tester bed with a faded silk canopy. A bathroom opened off the room. Twenty-five years ago, Jeff recalled hearing from his lawyer, the old man had modernized the place, building a large windmill for pumping water, and converting a couple of dressing rooms into baths. He had run in electricity, too. Only the heating remained antiquated—open fireplaces in all the rooms.
He thought of the cheap little varnished dresser with the cracked mirror that his mother had used, and the old resentment welled within him like gall. His mother was dead now. Dead, he remembered, without having had a chance to enjoy the money that came too late. His possession of this house would be his revenge for her against fate.
As he turned to leave the room he saw a shoe lying on the floor near the door. He knew immediately that it had been dropped there on the occupant's last trip from the room. He pictured the tall girl with the red-brown hair spilling it from her arms, and not seeing it "because her head was so darned high."
He stooped and picked it up. It was a slender black lid pump with a rakishly high heel. The heel was still straight and true, but the toe was scuffed, and in the thin sole a hole was worn through.
Jeff Howard carried the shoe downstairs, intending to throw it on a rubbish heap. A more urgent matter came to his mind and his thoughts took up the new subject with their usual intensity.
He went down to the bedroom he had chosen for himself, took off his coat and hung it up. The shoe, he absent-mindedly put in a far corner of the wardrobe, like a dog burying a treasured bone. There was no psychologist near to tell him he had performed a very significant act. . . . When he found it there next morning he angrily hurled it through an open window. It lodged in the forked branches of a cherry tree, to the consternation of a robin family. Leaves hid it from view. Jeff did not know that it was there, nor that the sharp little heel already had made a bruise upon his heart.

Farm Conservation Payments to Start

COLLEGE STATION.—The Agricultural Adjustment Administration has announced that initial payments under the 1936 Agricultural Conservation program will soon be started to producers in Texas and the other states of the Southern region, according to A. L. Smith, secretary of the State Conservation Committee.
There are two classes of these payments, Class I to be made on acreage diverted from soil-depleting crops, and Class II to be made on certain soil-building crops and practices. It is estimated that the payments in Texas will amount to approximately $37,322,455, though—because of incomplete figures on compliance at this time the final payments may vary from this amount.
Producers in the Southern region will receive 90 per cent of the Class I payments and 100 per cent of the Class II payments. H. R. Trolley, A. A. A. administrator, states. An additional payment will be made after the exact extent of participation is determined.
"Complete information on participation will not be available for several weeks," Mr. Trolley said, "although it is known that the number of farmers taking part in the program is in the neighborhood of 4,000,000. This is substantially in excess of participation for any one year under the old crop reduction.
"From the standpoint of sound business procedure, therefore, it was deemed advisable to take advantage of the safeguards provided by the program in order to avoid possible deficits, and, at the same time, avoid holding up a large share of the applications for payments until all of them are completed."

Roosevelt-Garner Campaign in Texas Moving Smoothly

AUSTIN, Tex. — With less than a month until the national election Nov. 3 the campaign in Texas for Roosevelt and Garner is operating like clock-work, with all units cooperating and with quotas coming in steadily to the headquarters of Roy Miller, campaign director in this state. It is a real Democratic campaign, judging by the activity, rallies and meetings being held in all of the counties.

As a result of this, Miller and Myron Blalock, chairman of the state Democratic executive committee predict that 1,000,000 Democrats will go to the polls Nov. 3, breaking all Texas records for general elections.

John Garner, vice president; Congressman Sam Rayburn, Senators Tom Connally and Morris Sheppard, together with Miller, show why it is more necessary than at any time in past Texas history to get out a big Democratic vote this year. Since the national convention has abrogated the two-thirds rule in making nominations, in the future delegate strength at a national convention will be based on the number of votes cast in the general election. Unless all Democrats vote there will be danger of losing strength and prestige in the national conventions and in Washington government affairs, and at present Texas is pre-eminent in control of party and government matters. This should ever be sacrificed, and to maintain this power, the vote of every Democrat and a contribution, no matter how small, is needed.

Texas will go three or four to one for Roosevelt. As to the national result Director Miller is supremely confident that Roosevelt will be re-elected, and he bases this on advice from party leaders in doubtful states, leaders who have had to know the facts. While contributions have been satisfactory the national war chest needs much more and promptly. Democrats do not have the sources of wealth to go that is available to the Republicans.

Nearly a dozen counties have completed their quotas and have forwarded the money, including Travis, Smith, Duvall, Bosque, Culberson, Kerr, Crockett and Winkler. Smith and Travis counties exceeded their quotas. Where Smith county was assigned $2,108, it turned in to headquarters $3,750. Where Travis county had a quota of $3,200, it turned over $6,100, doubling the amount, and leaders say they will run it up to $7,500.

Although serious floods in the San Angelo area caused some delay, E. E. Murphy, chairman of the twenty-first district, and his committee are putting their shoulders to the wheel and raising funds. Murphy made a classic, real American statement that should be a lesson to people in every state. He said:

"The administration has responded nobly in our flood crisis in furnishing money to the WPA for repairing damage done by the flood in San Angelo. This work has given employment to hundreds of men and I find the same cooperation has been extended in all parts of West Texas. There is not the slightest doubt that Roosevelt will be re-elected by a tremendous majority despite what a lot of Republican-minded straw votes show."

Brazil Is Taking Away Cotton Trade

DALLAS—Brazil is rapidly taking away much of the cotton markets of the world formerly supplied by the United States and will continue to do this as long as the United States goes on with its present trade policies, W. H. Beattie, sub-manager of the National City Bank in Rio de Janeiro, said on his arrival in Dallas to visit the Texas Centennial.

Brazil is fairly prosperous out of the country's trade balance is gradually diminishing, Beattie said. Brazil's money is pegged to the franc but since the devaluation by France of its money, Brazil probably will turn to the British pound or to the United States dollar, Beattie believes.

The Brazilian and his wife sailed from South America several weeks ago. Mrs. Beattie, who was formerly Miss Ellen Fulvler of Abilene, came to Texas to visit her family and Beattie joined her a few days ago. They will return to Brazil in a short time.

SUNFLOWERS GO DEMOCRAT

PORTLAND, Ore. — H. J. Griffith loves flowers — sunflowers — but as a registered Democrat since 1904 he became tired of jibes because he raised Landon sunflowers. A huge picture of President Roosevelt which he framed on a sign and planted in the sunflower bed, solved his trouble.

"On top of that," he joked, "we could give a big barbecue every month for the welfare clients."

For years, officials in Fort Worth and other Texas cities have pondered the legality of slot machines and marble devices. Most large Texas towns permit their operation in modified fashion pending the outcome of much-delayed litigation in the courts.

Fort Worth itself is marking time until the Texas courts of criminal appeals defines the anti-gambling statute. Marble boards are operated throughout the city. Slot machines of the nickel to a quarter variety are displayed prominently on the Frontier Centennial grounds and in some night clubs.

Police recently told city officials flatly that they could do nothing as long as city licenses were issued for the skill-or-chance devices. City Councilman W. J. Hammond reported that complaints had come from many mothers that their children spend school lunch money on marble boards.

In many places, marble boards have operated "in one day and out the next." Police confiscate the machines after complaints. Courts issue orders restraining them from confiscating others. Dallas last month began a "clean-up" of its Centennial entertainment spots. First it ordered midway "strip shows" at the Texas Centennial Exposition to put clothes on their performers. Next officers declared war on nickel-getting games.

Houston and San Antonio, usually liberal cities, tolerate certain types of marble boards and no open slot machines. Horse race games played with marbles are barred. El Paso, also recognized for its liberality, treats marble boards more roughly than any other Texas city. Police there confiscate and destroy all machines on sight — without awaiting the formality of a court order.

Austin, the state capital, has banned the devices in all forms. State Rangers and local police cooperate in keeping cafes, drugstores, and night-clubs from ridding their customers of spare change by nickel-in-the-slot methods.

Municipal Marble Boards Are Urged By City Manager

FORT WORTH, Tex. — Municipal ownership of marble boards estimated to net $540,000 a year in Fort Worth has been advocated by City Manager George D. Fairtrace.

That was Fairtrace's reply to a city council query on what to do with marble boards. The 2,000 privately-owned machines now in Fort Worth bring an annual profit of more than a half million dollars to their operators. The city manager said that sum would put the city welfare service in excellent condition.

"On top of that," he joked, "we could give a big barbecue every month for the welfare clients."
