'Life's' Death Marks Passing of an Era

One of the more melancholy news items of the fall was the announcement that magazine Life had been sold and would no longer be published as a humorous magazine.

To the new generation which was graduated into the magazine-reading class within the last decade, this news can have little meaning; to older readers, especially to those whose memories run back into the generation before the war, it marks a sharp change in American life.

It was for the most part a leisurely and good-natured humor which Life offered its readers. The magazine had its "causes," now and then, to be sure, but it took them in its stride without getting shrill about them.

It luxuriated in an atmosphere of Gibson girls, its editorials sounded like the philosophic reflections of a wise and benign old gentleman, and it used satire, for the most part, without malice.

It fitted the pre-war era as a glove fits the hand. It had in it a strong flavoring of the more pleasant aspects of the gay 90's. It was keyed to the tempo of a world that was just beginning to use automobiles and wireless and airplanes. It was dignified in its fun. After the war America somehow moved out from under it. To mark the change you have only to compare the old Life with the magazine which can beconsidered its Girl Setting Record successsor, the New Yorker. The New Yorker is journalistic, pungent, irreverent Its first issue announced that it had no concern for the viewpoint of the old lady from Dubuque. It offered Peter

Arno in place of Charles Dana Gibson. Where Life would poke fun urbanely, the New Yorker would jab with a vicious scalpel that went right into the most sensitive nerve centers. Life could gently kid society for the antics of Ward Mc- four years ago, the school band Allister, the uncouth clumsiness of the social climber, and had elected a new "sweetheart" the millionaire's fen to marry his daughter to a European chosen for the fourth time. titleholder.

The New Yorker, with biting paragraphs and stinging en "most popular girl" title by cartoon, could imply that society as a whole was a needless and unattractive blot on the American landscape.

Each magazine reflected the viewpoint of the wise man scholastically. of its own era. As the '20s gave way to the '30s, the New Yorker became a tremendous success, as it deserved to do; and Life declined and went on the block, as it was

And back of it all lies the rather dismaying fact that it was two decades ago. Where we were confident that progress was automatic, and that things would work out very well as soon as a few minor nuisances were curbed, we are now dismayed and confused, trusting in none of our old stadbys, resolved to give no quarter at all to the enemies of that progress which, we now realize, has utterly ceased to be automatic.

To the not-so-old old-timers who remember Life's heyday, the news of Life's passing from its old form must come as a melancholy reminder of a disquieting change.

Among straw votes showing shift of political affiliations, there has been no mention of the St. Louis zoo frog reported changing its color.
