

Bull Town Bulletins

By Bill Ellis

IT'S THE TIME of year once again for severe weather, and storms of the past week have made us painfully aware of something that affects the residents of Parmer County.

That is the fact that the National Weather Service in Amarillo, which supplies the storm warnings for the three Amarillo television stations, as well as their radio stations, never appears to "get their act together" until the storm systems have already moved through Parmer County.

Case in point was Tuesday, when a tornado-laden cloud moved through the county, and several folks in Friona saw evidence of twisters.

About ten to fifteen minutes after the storm had done its act in Friona, the TV stations began to get their warnings from the National Weather Service. By then, the cloud was already through with Parmer County. At least the folks in Hereford and Deaf Smith County were forewarned, in case they wanted to take any precautions.

This is no 1987 phenomenon, either. Ye editor has been an astute weather observer all his life, being raised by an old-time farmer whose entire livelihood depended upon the weather. We can recall precious few times that the Amarillo NWS ever put out a warning that would do the folks in central or western Parmer County any good at all.

We don't know what the reason for this problem is. The only thing we can figure out is that by the time the people at the NWS determine that a particular cloud might pose a threat to Amarillo, and begin to put out warnings, most of the time it has already passed Parmer County.

As these clouds develop (and they generally follow the path we described earlier, moving from southwest to northeast), you will then begin to see more and more weather bulletins as the evening wears on.

We are always prone to ask "That's fine, but where were you 30 minutes or an hour ago, when we would have liked a little warning?"

The Oklahoma Panhandle and Southern Kansas get more weather notice from Amarillo than do the southwestern counties of Texas.

But—if Parmer County residents have any cause to be upset about the methods used by the National Weather Service in their storm warnings, then those in Clovis and Curry County, N.M., have a right to be furious.

The same thing we have said about Parmer County is true for the folks just across the state line, except it's worse, because the cloud was over them 30 minutes to an hour before it gets to us, in most cases.

And Clovis is a sizeable city. If we in the Texas Panhandle and High Plains feel left out by the politicians, then we probably have an idea of how Clovis residents feel in regard to the weather alert situation.

Although Amarillo TV and radio give "lip service" in their attempts to cover Clovis' news, the fact is that that city is on their "fringe area." It is the same proximity from Lubbock, and although we're not as familiar with the National Weather Service trends from Lubbock, we would suspect that the service there would be similar as from Amarillo.

The next closest NWS facility is probably in Albuquerque, N.M., and we're not aware of anyone who watches Albuquerque television for their weather news.

They don't mind making a pitch for our shopping dollars in Amarillo. How's about giving us a look more often (and lots earlier) when severe weather threatens. Heck, we probably spawn nine out of ten of your bad weather systems. It would be well worth their time to keep an eye out toward the west.

Area Gets Rainfall

In Bovina, about two and one-half to three inches of rain has been received during the week and more is in the forecast.

Some farmers lost at least a part of their crop and some lost all due to a hail storm Sunday evening in the Rhea community. We talked with Dale Schueler who said the heaviest storm came Sunday afternoon a half mile south of Carl Schlenker's place and one-half mile north of Chris Drager's farm which was about a two mile strip of large hail and high winds.

The farms that were heavily damaged belonged to Dutch Dean, Carl Schlenker and some was reported on the farm belonging to Donald Dale. The storm traveled southwest to northeast, according to Schueler.

Joe Steelman farms six miles east and said he had received about 3.3 inches of rain and no hail.

Tom Beauchamp who farms eight miles southeast said he had received about two and one-half inches of rain during the past week, but no hail.
