The Twilight Of Europe

When a head of state embarks on a rule-or-ruin project, as Adolf Hitler did, he has at least one comforting assurance the project can't be entirely unsuccessful.

Hitler's war, while it failed to establish the rule of a "New Order," did a pretty thorough job of ruining Europe. It took a staggering total of lives, agricultural lands, raw materials and industrial installations. It caused social and economic upheavals almost as complete as the Ladies' Association of the Midland political disintegration of Germany. And in doing these things it probably finished off the continent of Europe and the British Isles as the financial, political and inteled during the afternoon. lectual hub of the world—a position they held for 2000 years and more.

The twilight of Europe is painfully apparent today. It can be seen in Washington, where representatives of the once proud and mighty British Empire are pleading for the American money which might assure the Empire's economic survival. It can be seen even more clearly in London at the Council of Foreign Ministers.

There the conflict of prestige and political morals is between Russia and the United States—Russia, which Hitler hated and feared even more than he hated England, and the United States, which he considered decadent and

Today the magnetic attraction of Russia's social system, studiously exploited by Russia's government, has pulled Eastern Europe into her orbit.

Today the United States, physically unharmed by war, is the world's financial center. However distasteful capitalism may be to Europeans today—and it has been bitterly and ungenerously abused from London to Moscow —the fruits of a prosperous capitalistic system, which did so much to save England and Russia in their days of greatest peril, are now as compellingly attractive to them as the Russian political philosophy seems to be.

And so, thanks largely to Hitler, the paths of wealth and power, and eventually of culture and civilization, have turned east and west from the familiar countryside

Europe will retain her monuments and cultural heritage of antiquity, her pride and jealousies and discontent. tion in a conference on the termination of lend-lease, Prime Minister Joseph B. Chifley announced But it is doubtful that she can ever again exert the power that has molded history since the Roman Empire.

So it behooves the dominant states of Russia and America to live and work together, to profit by the endless struggles which brought Europe to her present state, to reach an effective compromise in their possession of world power despite their ideological differences.

Otherwise Hitler will have won the war.

Inability of the Bruins to stop the onrushing Cardinals have cost them much prestige as well as several precious lengths in the won and lost columns. Cubs' Lead Narrow Charley Grimm's Cubs are faced with the necessity of winning at least one of the two games or dropping out of the lead for the first time since July 8.

The Cards journey to Pittsburgh for a single night game Thursday, a playoff of a Sept. 4 tie, and then close in Cincinnati with two Sat-urday and one Sunday.

Hank Borowy, the ex-Yankee, who twice in the last month defeated St. Louis in 10 innings, each time by a 4-1 score, will pitch for the Cubs Tuesday. He will be op-posed by Harry Brecheen, who has won his last six straight, including three over the Cubs. two by shut-
