Craft Crash At 200 Feet, Fall Into Water; Five Survivors Found

CORPUS CHRISTI-(AP)-Twenty-one officers and men were killed Thursday night when two Naval planes collided near Spoil Island.

Two long range patrol seaplanes known as "Ma-riners," skimming about 200 feet above the surface of the bay, collided at 8:06 p.m.

Naval officials announced Friday that one plane was taking off, the other landing at the time. One ship attempted to continue but the pilot lost control and crashed into the water. Both planes sank.

Naval boats Friday are attempting to recover the bodies, and to salvage the two huge planes.

* The crash occurred after dark. The ships were on routine flights.

The collision occurred at 200 feet, and was readily heard by those on Spoil Island, a minor naval base here.

Flares and searchlights made the surface of the water almost as bright as day as survivors were sought. Six were found and hurried to Naval hospitals for treatment

The accident was one of the most serious to occur here since installa tion of the Naval base, one of the largest in the nation. Crash boats and hospital boats rushed to the scene, and began rescue operations with the use of flares and searchlights visible on the mainland eight miles away. One of the six tarvivors picked up died Friday at the Naval hos-pital. Of the others, four were reported in good condition, and the other serious but favorable.

Promises For Palestine

Under a League of Nations mandate, Great Britain in 1922 committed itself to eventual independence for Palestine. Britain also undertook to establish a Jewish National Home there and to safeguard the civil and religious rights of the Arab population.

Although the United States declined to accept the League of Nations mandate, it has more recently gotten into the picture by making promises both to the Jews and Arabs.

Such is the background-a background of broken promises-for the current violence in Egypt and Palestine.

Both the Jews and the Arabs, tired of conflicting plans for solution of the vital and delicate Palestine problem, now are demanding fulfillment of these promises.

That the conflict-which has raged intermittently for a quarter of a century-now is at a critical stage, is evidenced by the fact that the pressure on both sides is stronger than ever before. The international movement Annual Fall Concert To Be Played for a Jewish home worked tirelessly for supporters throughout the war and now has a tremendous backing. On the other hand, the Arabs now are joined in a power ful Arab League comprising the seven states of Syria Lebanon, Trans-Jordan, Iraq, Saudi Arabia, Yemen and Egypt, representing about 40,000,000 people.

Foreign oil and strategic interests in the Near East give the Arabs a lever with which to exert strong pressure. King Ibn Saud, the most powerful figure in the Arab Atom Energy Research Attractions in addition to Band world, already is reported to have threatened cancellation of important U.S. oil concessions in his dominion if Arab demands are not satisfied.

The league now is meeting in Cairo, where most of the recent violence has occurred, and is expected to take a stand on the Palestine problem as well as other Near East questions, including the Arab position in all North Africa from the Strait of Gibraltar to the Persian Gulf.

This problem, involving the question of a home for Jews as against the rights of the Arabs, is too dangerous to postpone a solution. The British and U.S. policy of promises and delay will only worsen the situation if permitted to continue. As in the other trouble spots of the world, action is needed quickly to prevent the problem from becoming any more deep-rooted than it is.

Veterans' Job Prospects

Millions of returning veterans-the estimated 80 per cent of men in service who don't have re-employment rights-face bitter disillusionment when they try to get jobs in industry during the reconversion period.

Most of industry is covered by union contracts which establish the seniority rights of workers. The unions' contention, upheld by a regional War Labor Board ruling. is that a veteran cannot use his service seniority rights in getting a new job. Once he gets a job, they say, and passes a satisfactory probationary period, then give him seniority according to his length of service in the armed forces.

During the reconversion period practically every factory or plant will have laid off some workers. Result will be call-back lists of varying lengths. How will it be possible, then, for a vet to get a job in one of these factories until everyone who had a job during the war goes back to work? It won't, AFL admits. In other words, according to the way the unions look at it, theoretically employment will have to rise above the wartime peak before there is a chance for a veteran to get a job.

Lessening the severity of this situation, however, will be the old men, women and transplanted war workers going home who won't answer when the call-back list is read. But recent surveys show a much smaller per cent of these workers expected to drop out of the labor market than was previously estimated by the War Manpower Commission.

All Set For Shipping Scramble

Whether the United States is going to let England resume domination of the world's commercial shipping lanes is one of the big underlying questions being hashed over in meetings of the United Maritime Executive Board, attended by representatives from 17 nations.

The United Maritime Authority shipping pool, which has controlled all Allied cargo vessels, is supposed to be dissolved March 2, 1946. If that is done with one fell swoop, there will be a frantic scramble to grab available trade. Allied occupation activities and efforts to rehabili-tate war-damaged areas are likely to suffer.

It is hoped by the smaller nations that there will be a slow dissolution of the pool. This would permit a more orderly and fairer distribution of foreign shipping business. It also would give countries other than England a better chance to buy U.S. ships that are put up for sale.

When the war started, England had 25,000,000 tons of shipping. U.S. was second with 11,000,000 tons. Only about one-third of this was carrying foreign trade, however. Next in order were Japan, Norway, Germany and Italy.

The American Way

We noticed an announcement the other day that quite a number of discharged servicemen have decided to go into the diaper service business. That seems to be quite in line with the fine old American tradition of starting at the bottom.

THIS, we reasoned, is no time L to offer folks a car that stops with artful face-lifting.

It has been nearly four years since our last new Buick was built - it wouldn't be shooting square now to give you less than our honor-bright best.

So we overhauled our whole factory to advantage it with the latest in war-developed machines and processes.

We scoured the country for the stoutest metals anyone can buy today.
