The Supreme Folly.

Of all the follies of which men are guilty there is none quite so stupendous and far-reaching as that of the use of strong drink. Drunkenness is the supreme folly of all ages. No other can equal it in the sum total of misery and desolation. No two other follies can equal its all the other follies to which the McBryde. human family is heir can show such 3. ties, robs the heart of its fine gold, lightful evening. murders true affection and takes out of life all that is noble and holy. It lowers the human below the brute. It takes the warmth out of sunshine and the beauty out of the flowers. It robs childish laughter of its music and makes a mockery of the marriage vow. It will make a man curse his mother, betray the woman who has given her soul and body into his keeping and murder the children she has brought into awful curse? That is the pity of it. The strong mind falls just like the weak mind. No human mind can hold out against the demon if indulgence is continued. The man of strong mind laughs at the fools who fall so quickly, and feels secure in his strength. But it is only a question of time. It takes the demon longer to gain the mastery over him, but his end is just as nevitable as that of the weak fool. One is a weak fool and the other is a strong fool, and the folly of the strong fool is immeasurably the greater. Tioga Herald.

Loud voiced and much excited, a native of Butte, Mont., sent up cry for a bellboy at a hotel in Chicago the other day. He explained that he had just lost a valuable article and was sure it had gone out with his laurdry. He handed the responding bellboy a dollar to get the package tack at once, if possible. The bellboy "beat it," as he said, to the laundry and found that the westerner's linen had just been dumped into a tub. The lad pawed around in the tub, found a crumpled handkerchief and drew forth the lost article. It was a glass eye.

fascination for me, and it has long the exception of a visit to Spitzbergen in 1902, when I went as far as Amsterdam Island and was stopped by ice, I have not been able to gratify my wish. In 1910 I visited Iceland. I find that when one has been to that country it is always assumed that one must have been Reykiavik the Geysirs. But Reykiavik and the Geysirs had no attractions for me, as I was anxious to visit less well-known parts. The north and east coasts of Iceland and the Island of Grimsey were the object of my voyage. Grimsey lies thirty miles north of the north coast of Iceland, and is just within the Arctic circle. It has about seventy inhabitants, who, with the exception of the pastor, live in turf huts. There is a very small wooden church, across the interior of which a large beam supports pulpit. If the pastor upright the beam must come immediately in front of his face, and I regret that I was unable to attend a service to see how the difficulty was solved. The island is best known as the only breeding-place in Europe of the little auk. I was told that inhabitants are noted chess players, Avers. Grimsey may

WHALES ANCHORED AT A WHALING STATION

During my visits I never saw more than a dozen of these interesting little birds. Their breedingplaces are among the boulders on the most accessible parts of the shore, and an egg collector, who has lived a great number of years at Akureyri (the principal port on the north coast of Iceland) boasted to me that there were no little auks left breeding in Grimsey, as he had taken every egg. Fortunately, a few have escaped him, but the birds have evidently enormously decreased since thé island was visited by Hantsch, the German naturalist

Snow buntings in their beautiful black and white summer plumage, were the commonest birds round the huts. Red-necked phalaropes, purple sandpipers, meadow pipits and ringed plovers were very abundant. Eider ducks nest all round the dwelling houses, and are so tame that the islanders stroke them when sitting on their

The commonest of the cliff breeders are the fulmars, puffins, kittiwakes, razorbills, and Brunnich's guillemots, grey phalaropes, wheatears, white wagtails, ravens and other birds are seen in smaller numbers. About three hundred and ten miles N.N.E. of Iceland and two hundred and forty miles from the coast of Greenland, lies the Island of Jan Mayen. I had read about it in various vooks of Arctic travels, and in 1910 suggested half jokingly to my captain that I should like to go there. As the construction of my the little cook, and the nourishing yacht is not adapted for encountering ice, he treated my suggestion even less seriously than I had hoped, and for the time being I had to agree. However, the thought that I had been within twenty-six hours of that coveted goal lay at the back of my second visit to Iceland the following year, though I did not mention it until I saw what the weather was like at Grimsey. I took the precaution of providing myself with the Austrian chart of Jan Mayen, which I knew my captain would consider unnecessary. Owing to bad weather, I had to wait some time at Akureyri (North Iceland) before I could go over to Grimsey, and during this time a naval lieutenant, who had been with the ill-fated Mikkelsen expedition to Greenland, came to call upon me. Unfortunatly, I was not on board, and he interviewed the captain instead. He told him that ice had been seen off Grimsey four days before our arrival, and, of course, scorned the idea of our going to Jan Mayen. The prospect did not seem hopeful, but as the ice was so near I told my captain that I should like to go and see it, and turn round as soon as we met with it. As we had perpetual daylight this suggestion found favor. We went over to Grimsey, where the inhabitants only confirmed what we had down but after, and expected we should meet wi begin payment on a miles north of the island. but I stipulated that our course should lie straight in the direction of Jan Mayen. The weather was bright and clear, and at 8 a. m. we sighted a distant iceberg between ourselves and the Greenland coast. At 11 a. m. there was no other sign of ice, though we had come over fifty Birds were very scarce, generally only one or two fulmars were in sight, and I had seen two guillemots, two Arctic skua, and a few puf-At 2 p. m. we had steamed eighty-five miles. No ice had been seen, and only a few fulmars and kittiwakes came within sight of the yacht 7:20 p. m. Log 148 miles. A northerly breeze sprung up, and the temperature of the water was 40 degrees. It had been 42 degrees two hours earlier. I had only seen one Razorbill in the afternoon and a few fulmars and kittiwakes. 9:15 p. m. Log 180 miles. Very clear weather. The sun set at about 11:15 p. m. The wind was westerly, and as there was a very heavy swell, little sleep was to be had. Bright sunshine cheered me when I looked out in the early hours of the following morning. There was no sign of ice, and evidently none had been seen, or I should have heard of it. I knew that Jan Mayen could not be far off. At 7:15 a. m. I again looked out, and saw a dim outline of cliffs ahead, lost above in mist and cloud. Great numbers of Brunnich's guillemots, fulmars and a few kittiwakes were flying round, a sure sign of the proximity of land. The thermcmeter on deck registered 45 degrees Fahrenheit and the log 290 miles. Gradually the beautiful snow-covered volcano. Beerenberg, appeared above the cloud. All below was shrouded in mist, except just above sea level, where one could trace the dim outline of land. As we approached, a long, lew-lying peninsula stretched out to the southwest, and as the mist cleared off. and opened up the high cliffs in front of us, we could see that the tops were covered with vegetation, and snow lay only in patches in the deep ravines. The whole island is apparently studded with craters, and the tops of the cliffs form huge rugged basins. The cliffs are a curious rusty red color (suggestive of iron) mixed with the black lava. I am not sure whether it was only the sight of them which frightened my captain, but, at all events, he believed his compasses to be affected, and was not enjoying himself as much as I was. Along the short was a line of broken ice. The temperature of the water at 9 a. m. was 41 degrees and at 10:50 a, m. 36 degrees. As we steamed along from South Cape to South East Cape we saw that Beerenberg. which at first appeared part of the cliffs in front of us, was separated from them by a low stretch of land, one mile and a half wide, and apparently little above sea level. Had there been no surf. it looked an easy place to land, but under the circumstances it was impossible. By the time we reached this isthmus the whole island was clear, except for a few fleecy clouds over the southern end. Leaving the isthmus behind us, we passed the remarkable crater. Egg Bluff, once, I believe, an island, but now apparently connected with the shore. One side of it has been worn away by the sea. It is 600 feet high, and from its inner wall steam is said to be always rising. It was the warmest day we had had since leaving England, and I spent the whole morning on the bridge without a coat. Shortly after passing Egg Bluff, we steamed under Beerenberg, which, on this glorious, cloudless day, was dazzling in its snowy whiteness. At noon the thermometer registered 40 degrees, the temperature of the wa-

As it was, we found, as we approached it in the dinghey, that there was too much surf to allow of our attempting it. and I had to content myself with rowing along within a few yards of the shore. Floating ice stopped us in one direction, and heavy surf in the other. Numbers of glaucous gulls were sitting above high-water mark, and of course were very tame. Hundreds of Brunnich's guillemots and fulmars flew around us, and I saw one black guillemot, probably U. mandti. Not until I fired my gun had I any idea of the number of birds on the cliff above me. Probably owing to the nature of the soil, and the fact that the lava slopes are less precipitous than the granite cliffs where seafowl generally congregate, the usual evidences of a great breeding resort were absent. bergen, as they are covered with lava dust, and the wonderful blue ice, which is so characteristic of that country, is absent. Neither are the tops of the mountains so jagged, and I cannot agree with Scoresby that it reminded me in any way of Spitzbergen. As it was inadvisable to go down the west coast, we returned by the southeast coast, leaving the Wille glacier at 1:40 p. m. As we steamed round the South East cape, we But for the surf, no one could have seen it under more perfect conditions, and probably without the wind we should have had fog. Already it was creeping up to eastward of us, and at 5 p. m., when we were well away from the island, we ran into it. After the fog we had an easterly gale and dangerous sea, which obliged us to change our course for a time. Women of Middle Age

Such warning symptoms as sense of suffocation, hot flashes, severe headaches, melancholia, dread of impending evil, palpitation of the heart, irregularity, constipation and dizziness are promptly treated by intelligent women who are approaching the period of life.

This is the most critical period of woman's life and she who neglects the care of her health at this time invites incurable disease and pain. Why not be guided by the experience of others and take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound? It is an indisputable fact that this grand old remedy has helped thousands of women to pass through this trying period with comfort and safety. Thousands of genuine and honest testimonials support this fact.

From Mrs. HENRY HEAVILIN, Cadiz, Ohio. Fort Worth, Texas. — "I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegeta-ble Compound and derived great benefit from its use. It carried me safely through the Change of Life when I was in bad health. I had that all gone feeling most of the time, and headache constantly, I was edies and doctors, but did not improve until I began taking Lydia.
