FROM INGRAM.

Again in the year 1908, I knock at the door for admittance. As I have nothing else to do just now I will describe, to some extent, the little town of Ingram.

Being only a small town of course it has no street cars; on one side of it flows the clear stream of the Guadalupe and two other streams which enter in at this place, the Johnson Fork and Indian creek, and on the other side is a chain of mountains linked together on and on in the distance, if never ending. The highest one of these mountains is the Pull Pit and is very beautiful. North of town about 1 1/2 miles stands many noble, white monuments, keeping guard over the sleeping bodies beneath it. East of town stands the old mill and cotton gin, day after day the machinery toils and hums at its busy task.

Ingram high school is in the northern part, while the Baptist church is near the central part. The Methodist church is also in the northern part. There are two hotels, several boarding houses and three or four stores, and one dance hall.

And really wouldn't you enjoy a boat ride on the beautiful, clear ponds of the Guadalupe. The scenery all along the silvery stream is very pleasing to the eye of the lover of nature. Isn't it great pleasure to watch the progressing of time? not very long ago when I was sitting alone in my room the whistle of a distant steam engine came in my mind; how wonderful the people of olden times thought the engine to be when first invented. And also how they gathered to see the first trial of applying steam to the ship made by Robert Fulton, and called it Fulton's folly, but it was not such a folly, after all, was it? steam is now used to do a great deal of farm work. What a blessing it is to the poor working horses.

Well, as I have described our little, I will bid adieu.

TEXAS AND RAILROADS.

There are few business men in Texas today that are so dense as to not see clearly that the radical legislation of recent years has retarded and is today hampering the development of the state, by restricting railway construction. No man making a pretense of intelligence, would refuse to admit that a better system of public roads would be a long stride toward better conditions generally throughout the country. The only thing of special benefit that the Texas railway commission has done was to establish the tenet that "a railroad is a public highway." So far its service to the state was very good, but when the tribunal went on to the extent of amending its original finding in the case by acting in such a manner toward the railroads as to clearly imply "But we do not want any more public highways in Texas," it overstepped the authority vested in it, and consequently undone the work of the immortal James Stephens Hogg, whose idea in the creation of the Texas railway commission was the fixing of a tribunal before which the railroads and the people could each secure equal and exact justice, and not an inquisition, under the drastic rulings of which the operation of a railroad would become a confiscation of property.

It has been popular for politicians to pull their long forelocks and rant around on the public rostrum, giving full vent to the expression, "The railroads are ruining the country," with all the variations of which such an unreasonable statement is capable.

The masses of the people are so newly emancipated from the thrall of the high standing collar and the ample white shirt front of the political speaker that they have not yet gotten their bearings, but, it is beginning to dawn upon the masses of the farmers and business men of this state that the man who gets on the public rostrum and says, "railroads are a menace to the well being of the state," is a liar. The excuse cannot be made for him that "he didn't think" how the statement would look in print. It is often the case that such people do not think, but Texas business men have long ago reached the conclusion that a public official has got no business with a tongue unless he has brains above it. If some one else has got to do his thinking, let them do his talking also.

We have right here in this section of Texas, a scope of country lying west of San Antonio and between the Southern Pacific railroad on the south and the Santa Fe and Texas & Pacific railroads on the north, comprising about 50,000 square miles, or one fourth larger than the State of Ohio. In this section of country there are 70 miles of railroad. A public man in Texas who wants to restrict railroad construction in the state, when there is that much territory within its borders that is undeveloped because of not having adequate means of transportation, is a fool. Some may say, "the railroads will build there if it will pay them." There has probably not been 100 miles of railroad built in the state in the past ten years that paid a profit on its investment until "the building of the road developed the country and made it pay." It don't take a lot of profound wisdom for the voter to see, especially the southwest Texas voter, that he has for several years been following the lead of a lot of political pirates along a route that led the pirates into office, and left the people of this section, particularly, with undeveloped country, and no chance that the dreams of their youth in regard to what railroads would make of the country will ever be realized in time for their grandchildren to profit by them. We are not defending railroads. There are none in this part of the country to defend, and will not be as long as the present policy of our law making bodies to throttle every road in the state because some individual company has some time or other done wrong, continues. Why not put every man in the penitentiary because a thing with breeches on, calling itself a man, stole a horse.

B. F. Yoakum is a Texan, and a Texas railroad man. There are no men of any business capacity whatever in the State of Texas who have not the utmost confidence in the integrity of this wonderful promoter of railway interests. Yoakum is a man who feels a citizen's interest, aside from any commercial interest he may have, in the welfare of the state. That he is honest no man will attempt to gainsay. That he has the firmest grasp upon the railroad situation in Texas today, in its minutest detail, of any man in the railroad world, everyone of intelligence along these lines will admit. In an address at a meeting of the Farmers' Union and Texas Commercial Clubs held at Fort Worth on the 15th of the month, Mr. Yoakum went over the railroad situation very fully. In closing his remarks, Mr. Yoakum said:

"The political theory that the public service corporations and the public that they serve must continue a feeling of antagonism instead of close co-operation is a false one, and the great masses of thinking people are beginning to realize it, and they will soon co-operate through methods that are fair to both, and our public officers will be men who realize the importance of closer co-operation with these institutions, and the people and the railroad managers will do all in their power to bring around that friendly feeling that should exist rather than to pursue the course that a great many have pursued for the last few years, which today is costing the country and the people untold benefits. The pendulum that marks the center of fairness has been gradually pulled to one side until today it departs so far from the standard that it is at an angle of about 45 degrees, but it is going to gradually swing to its proper position, denoting a fair and equitable deal to all, not only in Texas, but throughout the United States, as the merchant realizes that his business is slipping away from him, as the land owner appreciates the fact that values are being discredited, as the wage earner realizes that while the politicians are condemning all institutions of the country, he and his family are going without the proper necessities of life. They are already beginning to ask in what are they being benefited by the unjust attacks being made upon our transportation and manufacturing industries."

Kentucky night riders, in an effort to raise the price of tobacco, are about to raise some other things, not desirable.

That fool fellow who has made the discovery that when you kiss a girl you don't touch her, ought to be either sentenced to life at hard labor, or killed outright.

Now Mexico is fixing for a fight against the Standard Oil Trust. They are going to keep fooling with this oil business until we poor folks can't afford anything but tallow candles.

If conditions in the financial world have improved every time they have been reported as improving it looks like we would be able to raise enough to get our other shirt out of the laundry some time.

Full rendition of property for taxation is having the effect of reducing the tax levy in many counties and cities throughout the state as well as putting counties on the cash basis list that have been behind and unable to cash their scrip for more than eighty cents on the dollar.

Russia is said to be angry with Germany and Austria. Well, that bear is always growling at some one, and may as well get a little sore at close neighbors once in a while as to be always snorting at some one so far off they can't hear, and would pay no attention if they did.

It is now in order for Mr. Morse to sue the United States for damages for knocking his game of selling stocks to the French and English. He is about to prove that he went to the old country to sell a bunch of gold bricks for the purpose of raising money to square himself on this side of the pond.

San Antonio should inform Mr. Grim that they would be glad for him to come to the Alamo city on a visit, but that there is nothing doing in the fighting line for him there. The Historic City of Ancient Missions would find little interest in the pugilistic performance of a middle-weight champion after the bouts it has witnessed between the warring elements of the Daughters of the Republic.

The Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers have been on a rampage that has resulted in great loss of property from the overflow. The loss at Pittsburg has been particularly great. Thousands of cellars in the down town district were filled with water and much valuable property will be a total loss. The Ohio will probably cause great damage from overflow further down the stream when the ice gorges recently formed give way and allow the pent up water to escape on its way to the sea.

The murder is out at last! The sergeant-at-arms of the House of Representatives at Washington has been obliged to issue a card of instruction to members of that body in the art of dodging gold brick sellers. The people have been a bit suspicious that the great majority of the members of Congress were altogether too slow, but the publication of a dispatch from Washington, dated February 16th, is the first published statement from headquarters to that effect. The dispatch says, "so persistent and successful had been the man in his operations that Henry Casson, sergeant-at-arms of the house was obliged to issue a circular to members of the house, warning them, etc."

Dr. J. B. Hunter of Mexico, Mo., died at his apartments in this city on Friday of last week of consumption. Mr. Hunter was 60 years old, and had been here for the past two months in company with his two daughters. The body was shipped Saturday to his home for interment.

THE OLD COUNTRY STORE.

By JOE SAPPINGTON.

I fear that the old time country store with its big, tall plank front, bearing the startling news that "John Smith deals in everything from a sulky plow to a tallow candle," is about to take its place in the land of fossils, along by the side of home-knit socks, the populist party and the razor-back hog. When I was a small boy the sight of a country store always awed me and caused a chill to chase up and down my spinal column. I remember very vividly the first time I was brought face to face with a country store. I was about seven years old at the time and was wearing a lindsey dress and a pair of mud boots with brass toe attachments and accompanied by my father.

Everything worked all right until I got to the door where I could see the big advertising pictures, the tin pans hanging from the ceiling, the nail kegs, the big coils of rope and could hear the store-keeper talking in a strange, low, mellow voice. I then jerked loose from father, gathered up my lindsey skirt and made a dash for liberty and the open country, and would probably have made my escape had my dress not caught on a splinter as I went through the fence. Father then picked me up, carried me into the store and tried to soothe my tears by telling me that nobody would hurt me and that the store man loved little boys; but I was in no soothing mood, as I could plainly see that my life was in danger; so I proceeded to squall at the top of my voice, kick father, the store-keeper, tin pans and everything else that I came to with my brass-toed boots. My father seeing that kind words and gentle treatment availed nothing, finally took me to the back of the store and after laying me not too gently across his knee, proceeded to spank me until my ears roared. The store-keeper finally allayed my fears by giving me a two-pound lump of brown sugar, a dog knife and a five-cent French harp.

I once gave a boy a good jaw scuffle and a tap off of a cultivator in exchange for a seat he occupied in church just behind that of a fellow who clerked in a country store, for the sweet privilege of being right close up to him so that I could see his store clothes in all their splendor and smell the bears oil on his head unmolested. Either my sniffer has undergone a radical change or the latter day country store has changed its smell, I know not which, as I am not able now to detect the presence of a cross roads store by its scent at the short distance of 200 yards, whereas as a boy I could locate one at 800 yards against the wind by the sweet odor of apples, tobacco, patent medicines, cheese, onion sets, wool hats and blind bridles that oozed from the cracks in the store.

The life of the country store-keeper was not as pleasant as one would suppose as he had many difficulties and trials to undergo. He had to inquire into the health of the entire community and listen with seeming pleasure to Uncle Billy's or Aunt Sally's tales of a torpid liver or a spine that had quit working. He was supposed to contribute with a lavish hand to everything that came along from foreign missions down to taking a 25 cent chance at a crazy quilt raffle and it was his bounded duty to laugh long and loud at every old joke that was told in his store. Think how trying it must have been on his system to listen to the same venerable, rheumatic old jokes day in and day out and feel that he had to either laugh good and strong or lose a customer.

I once knew a country merchant who made a bright profession of religion, but who persistently refused to join himself to any church on account of his customers, as they were pretty equally divided into two classes, viz: those who believed in infant baptism, falling from grace and getting it over again and those who believed in the perseverance of the saints, immersion, close communion and an eternal grip of your original brand of religion without any postscripts or subsequent editions.

I once came very nearly having serious trouble with a cross roads country merchant over some eggs. I was about nine years old at the time and had brought a basket of eggs to the store to exchange for a pair of brogan shoes. I had no trouble in making the exchange provided my eggs held out, and I assured the merchant that I had twenty dozen, no more and no less. There were five or six men in the store at the time and the merchant called upon them to bear witness to my statements about the number of dozen that I claimed to have, and said that he wanted them to come forward and see them counted. He began counting them in a loud voice and counted them in a way that made goose bumps rise all over my body and caused cold chills to run up and down my back. He began counting them by calling out, "four and four are six, and four are eight, and five are ten, and four are twelve," and on until the last egg in the basket making only ten dozen instead of twenty. He again called upon that bunch of farmers to bear witness to the correctness of his count and to my erroneous and fraudulent statement about the eggs, and every horny-handed son-of-a-bitch in the store agreed with him. I asked permission to count the eggs myself and my request was granted. I counted them as carefully as I could, considering the fact that I was scared almost to death, and to my horror, I found only seven dozen. I could feel the hair rising on my head; I was wet with sweat and began squalling at the top of my voice. The merchant got scared about my physical and mental condition and seemed to be afraid that I would throw a fit or burst a blood vessel and he told me not to cry, that he had given me the wrong box of eggs to count and that I could have my shoes.

I was so proud of my brogans that I wouldn't wear them for a long time afterwards, but kept them to smell of—they smelled just like a store. A few nights after I had traded my eggs for those shoes and before I had worn them, a rain storm came up and for fear they might get leaked on I took them to bed with me and slept with them in my arms. The first time I wore them I got caught in a cold rain three miles from home but my shoes never got wet—I pulled them off and walked home bare footed with them nestling in my bosom.

I want to take a last sad farewell look at the old time country store before the last one had passed from off this vale of tears. I want to behold it once more in all of its old time grandeur. I want to stand off in front of it and gaze at its tall plank gable end and read again that startling legend that said:

"George Washington Smith, Dealer in dry goods, hats, caps, boots and shoes. Highest market price paid for chickens, hides, eggs, beeswax, tallow and black-eyed peas." I then want to go on the inside where I expect to find two or three customers sound asleep on the counter, as I did in days gone by. I want to view again as of old the fly specked tin pans hanging from the canvass ceiling. I want to peep into the nail kegs—once more, I want to view with awe the big patent medicine pictures that used to hang on the walls, I want to approach the proprietor and ask him, "How is trade," and I want him to reply, "Not as good as it was before the war," just as he used to say when asked that important question. May time in its relentless march deal gently with the old time country store and its proprietor for around them cluster some of the sweetest memories that come to gladden and soften our hearts.—Ex.

ARRANGE FOR CHAUTAUQUA

Committees Appointed and the Dates Changed for Presbyterian Meeting

Rev. Hugh W. Hoon of San Antonio, representing the executive committee of Western Texas Presbytery, Presbyterian church, on summer encampment, was in the city Friday of last week conferring with Messrs. A. C. Schreiner, H. Renschel and Rev. John H. Green relative to the third annual Presbyterian encampment, to be held at the Westminster Assembly Grounds near Kerrville.

The dates for the coming encampment were changed from July 16 to August 4 to July 2 to July 21. Messrs. H. Renschel and J. H. Green were placed in charge of the advertising and correspondence. Messrs. A. C. Schreiner and J. H. Green were appointed a committee on equipment.

The assembly grounds have been surveyed and about a hundred lots have been staked off. These lots will be leased for a period of twenty years for the purpose of erecting summer homes or for camp sites. The lots are 50x60 and 35x60 feet and the improvements are limited to $600 per lot. Quite a number have been spoken for and parties ready to take them up as soon as the leases can be prepared.

For prices of lots apply to Rev. Hugh W. Hoon, San Antonio, Texas, who has the matter in charge.

Woodmen Supper.

The Woodmen of the World will give a big supper at their hall on Wednesday, the 11th of March, after which a dance will be given. All are invited.

WILL BRIDGE TOWN CREEK.

At a meeting of the city council Tuesday night an appropriation of $600.00 was made for the purpose of bridging Town creek. It will be remembered that some time since certain citizens of Kerrville made a proposition to the city and to the county that if those two organizations would each give $600.00 the people would subscribe the remainder of the amount. At the last regular meeting of the commissioners' court the county appropriated a like amount. The bridge will cost in the neighborhood of $2,400. The part to be borne by the citizens is subscribed and an effort will be made to have the bridge completed by the time the Presbyterian assembly meets, or at least before the fair, in August.

W. D. Love Announces.

In the proper column of this issue of the Sun will be found the announcement of W. D. Love as a candidate for the office of Judge of the 38th District. Judge Love is a resident of Uvalde, and a member of the bar of that place. He was formerly mayor of Uvalde, and is at present County Judge of Uvalde county. He is a gentleman of unquestionable moral integrity, a lawyer of ability, and a man, who, if elected to the office to which he aspires, will leave no effort unmade that will tend to the fair and proper discharge of his duties in accordance with the law. Judge Love has a large circle of acquaintances, both in the profession and among the laity of the district, who will join in bespeaking for him a fair consideration at the hands of the voters.

Fugitive Rearrested.

San Saba, Tex., Feb. 12.—Sheriff Hugh Miller returned yesterday with his prisoner, Ivey Rowan, who escaped from him last month at the Whorton Ranch in Kerr county, an account of which appeared in the Mountain Sun at the time. Rowan was arrested near Uvalde by the Deputy Sheriff of that county, and Sheriff Miller was notified. Rowan says he almost froze to death the morning he escaped from the officer. He was ten miles from where he escaped when daylight came.

Valentine Ball.

Kerrville's social set enjoyed a grand mask ball given at Fawcett & Co's hall, on Friday night of last week. The ball was a comic valentine affair and many of the costumes were artistic creations. No entertainment of recent date has afforded more real amusement.

Edward J. Pruitt.

Edward J. Pruitt, a boiler maker, 27 years old, died at 1103 Guadalupe street after several months' illness. The deceased was born in Kerrville and has lived here twelve years. He is survived by his father, William M. Pruitt; a brother, LeRoy, and by a sister, Miss Willie Pruitt, all of San Antonio. Funeral services were held at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the chapel of Sloan & Hagy, undertakers. The body was taken to Stockdale this morning to be buried beside the young man's mother.—San Antonio Gazette.

Two Die In One Day.

Blanco, Texas, Feb. 18.—The 6-months-old child of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Page, living seven miles from here, on the San Marcos road, died yesterday morning at 4 o'clock. Their 4-year-old child died at 4:20 o'clock in the evening. Both funerals took place here today.

Mr. Page is a son of J. T. Page, of this city, and has the profound sympathy of many friends here.
