ELEVENTH ANNUAL EXCEEDED EXPECTATIONS

Notwithstanding Dry Weather the West Texas Fair of 1909 Sets Pace for Future Exhibitions

COMPLETE LIST OF PRIZE WINNERS

Management Elated at Enterprise Shown by Exhibitors of Live Stock, Agricultural and Domestic Products—Second Day's Attendance Breaks all Previous Records—Greatest Goat Show in Texas.

Another success has been scored by the West Texas Fair. The eleventh annual exhibition, which closed last Friday evening, was successful in every way. The first day's attendance was about an average first day. The second day broke all former records in point of attendance, and interest. The third day fell a little short of last year's splendid showing, but on the whole the attendance made a splendid average, and management is highly gratified at the unqualified success of the enterprise.

Another source of great satisfaction to those in charge of the fair was the perfect unanimity of its working force, and entire absence of friction anywhere. The big crowds that attend the Kerrville Fairs are always orderly. They are neighbors and friends who meet there as in an annual reunion, but this year the order was noticeably good, even compared to the excellent department of the people at former fairs.

In the matter of exhibits, "Dry year" as it is, no better showing has ever been made here. The agricultural and horticultural display were never better. Larger, perhaps, it may have been in point of quantity, but never more noteworthy in point of quality and variety.

The livestock department was commented upon by visitors, who expressed surprise at the excellent showing of high grade and thoroughbred cattle and goats, and standard and thoroughbred horses.

BIGGEST GOAT SHOW IN TEXAS.

Prominent goat breeders from other states and from various sections of this state pronounced the Angora goat exhibit the biggest Angora goat show ever seen in Texas. The silver cup, given by the American Angora Goat Breeder's Association for the best breeder's flock, was awarded to Ed Fleming, the well-known Kimble County ranchman, whose home is near Telegraph. The leading live stock exhibitors were, Aug Lott, Otto Lich, J. R. Hodges, Wm. Roeder, Chas. Gass, A. E. Burge,

F. H. Mueller, Joe Besier, Nick Hagens, B. C. Bunbury, W. J. Moore, M. F. Weston, E. Hicks, J. H. Ward, H. B. King, J. M. Harris, J. M. Henderson, Arthur Real, B. F. Denton, C. H. Thalmann, J. T. S. Gammon, Schreiner Live Stock Company, George Williams, Jas. Rees, Walter Real, N. H. Skaggs, Hy. Dietert, C. W. Harper, Ward and Garrett, Howard Lacey, C. L. Smith, Ed Fleming, Nat Fine, H. V. Caid, Jas. Prentice, Starkey Bros., and E. C. Felty.

In the poultry department the showing was unusually good. Among the exhibitors were J. H. Ward, Mrs. R. C. Saner, E. E. Dietert, Emmet Henke, T. K. Carr, Robt. Horne, Julius Renschel, Mrs. Lucy A. Rees, G. C. Surber, and Jos. Rotge.

In the Ladies' Hall and Art Department a great showing was made in every class. Always a center of attraction, that department kept pace with the progress in other lines.

From the opening to closing the meeting was a success.

The board of directors this year is composed of J. E. Grinstead, President, Arthur Real, Vice-President, Oscar Rosenthal, Secretary and Treasurer, G. F. Schreiner, J. W. Babb, W. G. Carpenter, W. J. Moore, N. Herzog, W. A. Fawcett, Geo. Morris, E. Schwethelm, W. D. Burney, Capt. Chas. Schreiner, Mrs. G. F. Schreiner, Lady Manager, with the following assistants; Mrs. H. Renschel, Mrs. Mary Parsons, Mrs. F. L. Fordtran, Mrs. Lee Mason, Mrs. Chas. Real, Mrs. J. L. Pampell, Mrs. M. F. Weston, Mrs. E. Schwethelm, Miss Lynn Burnett, Mrs. Geo. Morris, Miss Clara Herzog, Miss Beatrice Weir, Mrs. C. A. Schreiner, Jr., Miss Nannie Allen, Miss Thorne Renschel, Mrs. L. A. Schreiner, Miss Hazel Hamilton, Mrs. Cecil Robinson, Miss Alida Scholl and Miss Eugie Myers.

In the department of jellies, preserves, etc., Mrs. Lee Mason and Mrs. Oscar Rosenthal had charge, while S. H. Huntington conducted the art department and Prof. H. W. Morelock, Prof. Koenig, and Miss Moore had charge of the educational department.

Special mention of those who assisted would be unjust, as the entire fair management and assistance was a splendid, smoothly working force, having success for a goal, and disdaining all obstacles.

Baraka felt a puff of hot air pass her, just above her right ankle, and at the same instant she heard a sharp report, not very loud, and more like the snapping of a strong but very dry stick than the explosion of firearms. She instinctively sprang to the left, keeping her eyes on Saad.

For a moment he did not move. But he was already dead as he slowly bent forward from the rock, making a deep obeisance with both arms hanging down before him, so that his body shot down perpendicularly to the sand, where it struck head first, rolled over and lay motionless in a heap. The traveler's was a Mauser pistol that would have killed as surely at 500 yards as 50; and the bullet had gone through the Tartar's brain.

Baraka sprang up the sandy slope and ran along the narrow beach to the body. In an instant she had detached the large brown water gourd from the thong by which he had hung over Saad's shoulder, and she felt that it was full. Without a thought for herself she hastened back to the mouth of the cave where the traveler was now standing. His face was dripping with perspiration that ran down into his matted golden beard, his eyes were wild, his hands were bleeding.

"Drink!" cried Baraka joyfully, and she gave him the gourd.

He gripped it as a greedy dog snaps at a bit of meat, and pulling out the wooden plug he set the gourd to his lips, with an expression of beatitude. But he was an old traveler and only drank a little, knowing that his life might depend on making the small supply last. A gourd of water was worth more than many rubies just then.

"Are you very thirsty yet?" he asked in a harsh voice.

"No," answered Baraka bravely; "keep it for yourself."

His hand closed round the neck of the gourd and he looked up towards the rocks above. The vulture had come back and was circling slowly down.

"You had better bury the body, while I go on working," said the traveler, turning back into the cave and taking the gourd with him.

Baraka had marked the place where he had tried to dig for water and had almost disappeared in the quicksand. She took from the body the wallet, in which were dates and some half-dry bread, and then dragged and pushed and rolled the dead man from the place where he had fallen. The vulture sat on the lowest ledge where his claws could find a hold, and though he watched her with horrible red eyes while she robbed him of his prey, he did not dare go nearer.

The body sank into the moving sand, and Baraka had to roll herself back to firmer ground in haste to escape being swallowed up with the dead man. The last she saw of him was one brown foot sticking up. It sank slowly out of sight, and then she went to the hollow where the ruby mine was and took up a piece of the broken crust, full of precious stones, and threw it at the vulture as hard as she could. It did not hit him, but he at once tumbled off the ledge into the air, opened his queer, bedraggled wings and struck upwards.

Then Baraka sat down in the shade and slowly brushed away the dry sand that had got into the folds of her linen garment, and looked steadily at the mouth of the cave and tried not to realize that her throat was parched and her lips almost cracking with thirst, and that the traveler had a gourd almost full of water with him. For she loved him, and was willing to die that he might live a little longer; besides, if he succeeded in digging his way out, there would be plenty to drink, and when he was free she was sure that he would love her because she had made him so rich.

The sun rose higher and at last shone down to the bottom of the chasm, and she sat in the narrow strip of shade, where she had passed most of the previous day. She was very thirsty and feverish, and felt tired, and wished she could sleep, but could not. Still the traveler toiled in the darkness, and from time to time she heard sounds from far away as of stones and loose earth falling. He was still working hard, for he was very strong and he was desperate.

Baraka thought that if he was able to dig through the dam the water would run in again, and she watched the sand for hours, but it was drier than ever. The shadow broadened again, and crept up the rock quickly as the afternoon passed.

It was a long time since she had heard any sound from the cave; she went to the entrance and listened, but all was quite still. Perhaps the traveler had fallen asleep from exhaustion, too tired even to drag himself out into the air when he could work no longer. She sat down in the entrance and waited.

An hour passed. Perhaps he was at the mere inward suggestion of the gourd she sprang to her feet, and her heart beat frantically, and stood still an instant, and then beat again as if it would burst, and she could hardly breathe. She steadied herself against the rock, and then went in to know the truth, feeling her way, and instinctively shading her eyes as many people do in the dark.

A breath of cool air made her open them, and to her amazement there was light before her. She thought she must have turned quite round while she was walking, and that she was going back to the entrance, so she turned again. But in a few seconds there was light before her once more, and soon she saw the dry sand, full of her footprints and the traveler's, and then the hollow where the mine was came in sight.

She retraced her steps a second time, saw the light as before, ran forward on the smooth sand and stumbled upon a heap of earth and stones, just as she saw the sky through an irregular opening on the level of her face. Scarcely believing her senses she thrust out her hand towards the hole. It was real, and she was not dreaming, the traveler had got out and was gone, recking little of what might happen to her, since he was free with his treasure.

Baraka crept up the slope of earth as quickly as she could and got out; if she had hoped to find him waiting for her she was disappointed, for he was nowhere to be seen. He had got clear away, with his camel-bag full of rubies. A moment later she was lying on the ground, with her face in the stream, drinking her fill, and forgetful even of the man she loved. In order to deprive them of water the men had dug a channel by which it ran down directly from the spring to the ravine on that side; then they had blocked up the entrance with stones and earth, believing that one man's strength could never suffice to break through, and they had gone away. They had probably buried or burnt Baraka's clothes, for she did not see them anywhere.

She ate some of the dates from the dead man's wallet, and a bit of the dry black bread, and felt revived, since her greatest need had been for water, and that was satisfied. But when she had eaten and drunk, and had washed herself in the stream and twisted up her hair, she sat down upon a rock; and she felt so tired that she would have fallen asleep if the pain in her heart had not kept her awake. She clasped her hands together on her knees and bent over them, rocking herself.

When nearly an hour had passed she looked up and saw that the sun was sinking, for the shadows were turning purple in the deep gorge, and there was a golden light on the peaks above. She listened then, holding her breath; but there was no sound except the tinkling of the tiny stream as it fell over a ledge at some distance below her, following its new way down into the valley.

She rose at last, looked upward, and seemed about to go away when a thought occurred to her, which afterwards led to very singular consequences. Instead of going down the valley or climbing up out of it, she went back to the entrance of the cave, taking the wallet with her, dragged herself in once more over the loose stones and earth, reached the secret hollow where the pool had been, and made straight for the little mine of precious stones. The traveler had broken out many more than he had been able to carry, but she did not try to collect them all. She was not altogether ignorant of the trade carried on by the men of her family for generations, and though she had not the least idea of the real value of the finest of the rubies, she knew very well that it would be wise to take many small ones which she could exchange for clothing and necessities with the first women she met in the hills, while hiding the rest of the supply she would be able to carry in the wallet.

When she had made her wise selection, she looked once more towards the quicksand, and left the place for ever. Once outside she began to climb the rocks as fast as she could, for very soon it would be night and she would have to lie down and wait many hours for the day, since there was no moon, and the way was very dangerous, even for a Tartar girl who could almost tread on air.

High up on the mountain, over the dry well where Baraka and the stranger had been imprisoned, the vulture perched alone with empty craw and drooping wings. But it was of no use for him to wait; the living, who might have died of hunger and thirst, were gone, and the body of dead Saad lay fathoms deep in the quicksand, in the very maw of the mountain.

CHAPTER II.

There was good copy for the newspapers on both sides of the Atlantic in the news that the famous lyric soprano, Margarita da Cordova, whose real name was Miss Margaret Donne, was engaged to Mons. Konstantin Logotheti, a Greek financier of large fortune established in Paris, and almost as well known to art collectors as to needy governments, would-be promoters, and mothers of marriageable daughters.

The engagement was made known during the height of the London season, not long after they had both been at a week-end party at Craythwaite, Lord Creedmore's place in Derbyshire, where they had apparently come to a final understanding after knowing each other more than two years. Margaret was engaged to sing at Covent Garden that summer, and the first mention of the match was couched with the information that she intended to cancel all her engagements and never appear in public again. The result was that the next time she came down the stage to sing the Waltz Song in "Romeo and Juliet" she received a tremendous ovation before she opened her handsome lips, and another when she had finished the air; and she spent one of the happiest evenings she remembered.

Though she was at heart a nice English girl, not much over 24 years of age, the orphan daughter of an Oxford don who had married an American, she had developed, or fallen, to the point at which very popular and successful artists cannot live at all without applause, and are not happy unless they receive a certain amount of adulation. Even the envy they excite in their rivals is delicious, if not almost necessary to them.

Margaret's real nature had not been changed by a success that had been altogether phenomenal and had probably not been approached by any soprano since Mme. Bonanni; but a second nature had grown upon it and threatened to hide it from all but those who knew her very well indeed. The inward Margaret was honest and brave, rather sensitive, and still generous; the outward woman, the prima donna whom most people saw, was self-possessed to a fault, imperious when contradicted, and coolly ruthless when her artistic fame was at stake. The two natures did not agree well together, and made her wretched when they quarreled, but Logotheti, who was going to take her for better, for worse, professed to like them both, and was the only man she had ever known who did. That was one reason why she was going to marry him, after having refused him about a dozen times.

She had loved another man as much as she was capable of loving, and at one time he had loved her, but a misunderstanding and her devotion to her art had temporarily separated them; and later, when she had almost told him that she would have him if he asked her, he had answered her quite frankly that she was no longer the girl he had cared for, and he had suddenly disappeared from her life altogether. So Logotheti, brilliant, very rich, gifted, gay, and rather exotic in appearance and manner, but tenacious as a bloodhound, had won the prize after a struggle that had lasted two years. She had accepted him without much enthusiasm at the last, and without any great show of feeling.

"Let's try it," she had said, and he had been more than satisfied.

After a time, therefore, they told their friends that they were going to "try it."

The only woman with whom the great singer was at all intimate was the Countess Leven, Lord Creedmore's daughter, generally called "Lady Maud," whose husband had been in the diplomatic, and, after vainly trying to divorce her, had been killed in St. Petersburg by a bomb meant for a minister. The explosion had been so terrific that the dead man's identity had only been established by means of his pocketbook, which somehow escaped destruction. So Lady Maud was a childless widow of eight-and-twenty. Her father, when he had no prospect of ever succeeding to the title, had been a successful barrister, and then a hard-working member of parliament, and he had been from boyhood the close friend of Margaret's father. Hence the intimacy that grew up quickly between the two women when they at last met, though they had not known each other as children, because the lawyer had lived in town and his friend in Oxford.

"So you're going to try it, my dear!" said Lady Maud, when she heard the news.

She had a sweet low voice, and when she spoke now it was a little sad, for she had "tried it," and it had failed miserably. But she knew that the trial had not been a fair one; the only man she had ever cared for had been killed in South Africa, and as she had not even the excuse of having been engaged to him, she had married with indifference the first handsome man with a good name and a fair fortune who offered himself. He chanced to be a Russian diplomatist, and he turned out a spendthrift and an unfaithful husband. She was too kind-hearted to be glad that he had been blown to atoms by dynamite, but she was much too natural not to enjoy the liberty restored to her by his destruction; and she had not the least intention of ever "trying it" again.

"You don't sound very enthusiastic," laughed Margaret, who had no misgivings to speak of, and was generally a cheerful person. "If you don't encourage me I may not go on."

"There are two kinds of ruined gamblers," answered Lady Maud; "there are those that still like to watch other people play, and those who cannot bear the sight of a roulette table. I'm one of the second kind, but I'll come to the wedding all the same, and cheer like mad, if you ask me."

"That's nice of you. I really think I mean to marry him, and I wish you would help me with my wedding gown, dear. It would be dreadful if I looked like Juliet, or Elsa, or Lucia! Everybody would laugh, especially as Konstantin is rather of the Romeo type, with his almond-shaped eyes and his little black mustache! I suppose he really is, isn't he?"

"Perhaps—just a little. But he is a very handsome fellow."

Lady Maud's lips quivered, but Margaret did not see.

"Oh, I know!" she cried, laughing and shaking her head. "You once called him 'exotic,' and he is—but I'm awfully fond of him all the same, isn't that enough to marry on when there's everything else? You really will help me with my gown, won't you? You're such an angel!"

"Oh, yes, I'll do anything you like. Are you going to have a regular knock-down-and-drag-out smash at St. George's? The usual thing?"

Lady Maud did not despise slang, but she made it sound like music.

"No," answered Margaret, rather regretfully. "We cannot possibly be married till the season's quite over, or perhaps in the autumn, and then there will be nobody here. I'm not sure when I shall feel like it! Besides, Konstantin hates that sort of thing."

"Do you mean to say that you would like a show wedding in Hanover Square?" inquired Lady Maud.

"I've never done anything in a church," said the prima donna, rather enigmatically, but as if she would like to.

"Anything in a church?" repeated her friend, vaguely thoughtful, and with the slightest possible interrogation. "That's a funny way of looking at it!"

Margaret was a little ashamed of what she had said so naturally.

"I think Konstantin would like to have it in a chapel-of-ease in the Old Kent Road!" she said, laughing. "He sometimes talks of being married in tweeds and driving off in a hansom! Then he suggests going to Constantinople and getting it done by the patriarch, who is his uncle. Really, that would be rather smart, wouldn't it?"

"Distinctly," assented Lady Maud. "But if you do that, I'm afraid I cannot help you with the wedding gown. I don't know anything about the dress of a Byzantine bride."

"Konstantin says they dress very well," Margaret said. "But of course it is out of the question to do anything so ridiculous. It will end in the chapel-of-ease, I'm sure. He always has his own way. That's probably why I'm going to marry him, just because he insists on it. I don't see any other very convincing reason."

Lady Maud could not think of anything to say in answer to this; but as she really liked the singer she thought it was a pity.

Paul Griggs, the veteran man of letters, smiled rather sadly when she met him shopping in New Bond street, and told him of Margaret's engagement. He said that most great singers marry because the only way to get a divorce is to be married first. Though he knew the world he was not a cynic, and Lady Maud herself wondered how long it would be before Logothetis and his wife separated.

"But they are not married yet," Griggs added, looking at her with the quietly ready expression of a man who is willing that his indifferent words should be taken to have a special meaning if the person to whom he has spoken chooses, or is able, to understand them as they may be understood, but who is quite safe from being suspected of suggesting anything if there is no answering word or glance.

Lady Maud returned his look, but her handsome face grew rather cold. "Do you know of any reason why the marriage should not take place?" she inquired after a moment.

"If I don't give any reason, am I ever afterwards to hold my peace?" asked Griggs, with a faint smile on his weather-beaten face. "Are you publishing the bans? or are we thinking of the same thing?"

"I suppose we are. Good-morning." She nodded gravely and passed on, gathering up her black skirt a little, for there had been a shower. He stood still a moment before the shop window and looked after her, gravely admiring her figure and her walk, as he might have admired a very valuable thoroughbred. She was wearing mourning for her husband, not because any one would have blamed her if she had not done so, considering how he had treated her, but out of natural self-respect.

Griggs also looked after her as she went away because he felt that she was not quite pleased with him for having suggested that he and she had both been thinking of the same thing.

The thought concerned a third person, and one who rarely allowed himself to be overlooked; no less a man, in fact, than Mr. Rufus Van Torp, the American potentate of the great Nickel Trust, who was Lady Maud's most intimate friend, and who had long desired to make the prima donna his wife. He had bought a place adjoining Lord Creedmore's, and there had lately been a good deal of quite groundless gossip about him and Lady Maud, which had very nearly become a scandal. The truth was that they were the best friends in the world, and nothing more; the millionaire had for some time been interested in an unusual sort of charity which almost filled the lonely woman's life, and he had given considerable sums of money to help it. During the months preceding the beginning of this tale, he had also been the object of one of those dastardly attacks to which very rich and important financiers are more exposed than other men, and he had actually been accused of having done away with his partner's daughter, who had come to her end mysteriously during a panic in a New York theater. But his innocence had been proved in the clearest manner, and he had returned to the United States to look after the interests of the Trust.

When Griggs heard the news of Margaret's engagement to Logothetis, he immediately began to wonder how Mr. Van Torp would receive the intelligence; and if it had not already occurred to Lady Maud that the millionaire might make a final effort to rout his rival and marry the prima donna himself, the old author's observation suggested such a possibility. Van Torp was a man who had fought up to success and fortune with little regard for the obstacles he found in his way; he had worked as a cowboy in his early youth, and was apt to look on his adversaries and rivals in life either as refractory cattle or as dangerous wild beasts; and though he had some of the old-fashioned rancher's sense of fair play in a fight, he had much of the reckless daring and ruthless savagery that characterize the fast-disappearing western desperado.

Logothetis, on the other hand, was in many respects a true oriental, supremely astute and superlatively calm, but imbued, at heart, with a truly eastern contempt for any law that chanced to oppose his wish.

Both men had practically inexhaustible resources at their command, and both were determined to marry the prima donna. It occurred to Paul Griggs that a real struggle between such a pair of adversaries would be worth watching. There was unlimited money on both sides, and equal courage and determination. The Greek was the more cunning of the two, by great odds, and had now the considerable advantage of having been accepted by the lady; but the American was far more regardless of consequences to himself or to others in the pursuit of what he wanted, and, short of committing a crime, would put at least as broad an interpretation on the law. Logothetis had always lived in a highly civilized society, even in Constantinople, for it is the greatest mistake to imagine that the upper classes of Greece, in Greece or Turkey, are at all deficient in cultivation. Van Torp, on the contrary, had run away from civilization when a half-educated boy, he had grown to manhood in a community of men who had little respect for anything and feared nothing at all, and he had won success in a field where those who compete for it buy it at any price, from a lie to a life.

Lady Maud was thinking of these things as she disappeared from Griggs' sight, for she was a little afraid that she had made trouble. Ten days had passed since she had last written to Rufus Van Torp, and she had told him, amongst other things, that Mine de Cordova and Logothetis were engaged to be married, adding that it seemed to her one of the most ill-assorted matches of the season, and that her friend the singer was sure to be miserable herself and to make her husband perfectly wretched, though he was a very good sort in his way and she liked him. There had been no reason why she should not write the news to Mr. Van Torp, even though it was not public property yet, for he was her intimate friend, and she knew him to be as reticent as all doctors ought to be, and as some solicitors' clerks are. She had asked him not to tell any one till he heard of the engagement, from some one else.

He had not spoken of it, but something else had happened. He had cabled to Lady Maud that he was coming back to England by the next steamer. He often came out and went back suddenly two or three times at short intervals, and then stayed away for many months, but Lady Maud thought there could not be much doubt as to his reason for coming now. She knew well enough that he had tried to persuade the prima donna to marry him during the previous winter, and that if his passion for her had not shown itself much of late, this was due to other causes, chiefly to the persecution of which he had rid himself just before he went to America, but to some extent also to the fact that Margaret had not seemed inclined to accept any one else.

Lady Maud, who knew the man better than he knew himself, inwardly compared him to a volcano, quiescent just now, so far as Margaret was concerned, but ready to break out at any moment with unexpected and destructive energy.

Margaret herself, who had known Logothetis for years, and had seen him in his most dangerous moods as well as in his best moments, would have thought a similar comparison with an elemental force quite as truly descriptive of him, if it had occurred to her. The enterprising Greek had really attempted to carry her off by force on the night of the final rehearsal before her first appearance on the stage, and had only been thwarted because a royal rival had caused him to be locked up, as if by mistake, in order to carry her off himself; in which he also had failed most ridiculously, thanks to the young singer's friend, the celebrated Mme. Bonanni. That was a very amusing story. But on another occasion Margaret had found herself shut up with her oriental adorer in a room from which she could not escape, and he had not been long before she had been fared ill. After that he had behaved more like an ordinary human being, and she had allowed the natural attraction he had for her to draw her gradually to a promise of marriage; and now she talked to Lady Maud about her gown, but she still put off naming a day for the wedding, in spite of Logothetis' growing impatience.

This was the situation when the London season broke up and Mr. Van Torp landed at Southampton from an ocean greyhound that had covered the distance from New York in 5 days 12 hours and 37 minutes, which will doubtless seem very slow traveling if any one takes the trouble to read this tale 20 years hence, though the passengers were pleased because it was not much under the record time for steamers coming east.

KERRVILLE PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Kerrville Public Schools are now about to enter the seventh year's work under my supervision and we hope to make this the most successful of all. We have made many mistakes during these years, but we plead your continued indulgence of them with the hope that what we may be able to do for the good will more than offset them. Our acquaintances and mutual confidence should abundantly justify a most hearty co-operation looking to the good of the schools—a common cause in which we all feel a personal interest. In the words of a wise man of old, "Come let us reason together." If you have a grievance, bring us your troubles and we will listen to them with an interest equal to your own. Do not make our mistakes "fireside talk," but bear with them until you know that they are beyond remedy and then change your teachers. In all candor, do you ever make a mistake? Is public sentiment the bar at which all your false steps are criticised and righted? No. Experience and results teach you of the error and you set about to correct it. Look for a moment at the situation from our standpoint. No two homes have the same code from any viewpoint. What standard would you have us adopt? Do you believe that you could always suggest just the remedy that would solve all difficulties without friction? Then do you expect it of us? You must remember that you hear only the story of the prosecutor (or the "persecuted"). Come look at the trouble through the telescope of the other fellow's imagination, and then tell me what you would do. This is fair and justice to all concerned. It is the road we have to travel all the time. Won't you join us when your child is our companion? Perhaps our combined efforts will make his pathway brighter and easier to tread, or at least prevent him from turning back. This is your school and it is your duty to demand its proper administration and at the same time shoulder a part of its burdens.

I do not say these things out of criticism for any past acts of the people of Kerrville. On the contrary, I have found the majority heartily in sympathy with the school and all its best interests. But this is not all we need—we want your active co-operative sympathy. Just as in politics, so in school—one good, hard working, active friend is worth a half dozen fellows who "are for you," but who do nothing for you, except to give you their silent vote, and even then are afraid some one will know how they voted. Stand up for your school; endeavor to create in your children a love and respect for school and all its interests; train them into the belief and realization that the schoolroom is the workshop where they are to fashion models for all their future worship. Do you wonder why your children do not love school? Is it partly because you have taught them that it is a place of horror, or that the teacher is a monster? Children must love school and respect their teacher if they are to make the proper progress. You alone can create and keep alive these two conditions in the most wholesome manner. I have known some parents to smile at some prank in which their own child indulged; later I have known this same parent to weep over a wayward boy. In brief, we all make mistakes. Now, let us work together in an effort to make as few as possible in the future. To this end we are anxious to have you visit us often and talk with us about the welfare of your children.

FAILED TO COUNT US.

Del Rio is in the throes of a "deep-seated quarrel" over the question of incorporating the border city, and the controversy, we suspect is between the progressive and non progressive element of that border city. The quarrel, however, does not concern us, except that a serious mis-statement of facts has been published in the Valverde County Herald, of Aug. 13, in regard to conditions prevailing in Kerrville. A writer for that journal, after discussing the disadvantages of incorporation at length says:

"And as proof of the above assertion, I give you as under: Kerrville, Kerr county, has an incorporation city tax of ninety-five cents on the per one hundred dollars, assessable valuation. Kerrville is an older town than Del Rio in a good agricultural and grazing county, abundance of fine water; quite a health resort; on the A. P. railroad; has had incorporation for many years, still the town doth not grow, and it is very little more than one-third the size of Del Rio."

Now, that Kerrville is in Kerr county, that it is quite a health resort, are all true statements. That it is surrounded by a good country, has an abundance of fine water, and is situated on a railroad, the San Antonio and Aransas pass, are also correct statements. That a Tax of 95 cents on the one hundred dollars was levied last year is true. 55 cents was school and school house bond sinking fund tax, leaving 40 cents on the one hundred dollar valuation to defray all expenses of city government. About 90 per cent of the amount collected outside the school and school house tax was expended on the streets and public improvements.

As to Kerrville being "very little more than one-third the size of Del Rio," this writer saith not. We have not counted Del Rio, and we are impressed with the idea that the writer of the article above quoted had not counted Kerrville, or he would not have written "and still the town doth not grow!"

The facts in regard to Kerrville's growth are as follows: The town was organized in 1856. It remained a quiet mountain village until 1887, when with the advent of the railroad it grew to a town of 1,000 population, with which number it was incorporated in 1889. The census of 1900 gives a population of 1423, or an increase of about 10 per cent in the just ten years of its existence. The official census, taken in June of this year, gives a population of 2968, or an increase of a little more the 100 per cent in nine years. This town has never had a boom, and don't want one. Its growth has been steady and substantial. In addition to increase in population, it has gradually out-grown old customs of "mossbackism." The business buildings are modern and substantial, the homes comfortable, and well kept. Kerrville has the best public school and the best streets of any town of less than 5000 population in Texas.

The city tax this year is $1.00 on the $100 valuation. Of that 60 cents is for school purposes and 40 cents for the city government and street and other public improvements. The largest tax payers in the city are the ones most pleased with incorporation. The Mayor and city council are public spirited men who serve without pay, and have the loyal support of those who pay the burden of the city's revenues. We have no objection to the Herald taking the back track on the trail of modern progress in its own town, but we are not disposed to allow it to use Kerrville, one of the most progressive and prosperous towns in the state, as an object lesson of failure and dissension.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury.

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. POLICING THE CITY AND THE FAIR GROUNDS

There has for some time been more or less discussion of the matter of adequate policing the City of Kerrville, under the present administration. In justice to the administration and to Sheriff Moore and his deputies and Constable Henry Staudt, the public should be fully advised upon the matter. Ten years ago Kerrville had a population of 1423,—today the population is a little more than twice that number, and yet, notwithstanding reference is sometimes unjustly made to the prevalence of lawlessness, the records will show that there were two complaints made ten years ago, to everyone that is made now. It is childish folly to say that overt acts and petty crimes occur and that the people do not make complaint, because there is no adequate police force. Kerrville has never in its history known a more orderly era than the past two years. Last week was a splendid object lesson in the premises. A fair was in progress, thousands of people of all classes were in the city. Sheriff J. T. Moore and his deputies policed the fair grounds, and Constable Staudt and his deputies policed the city. There was practically no disturbance. No one complained of breaches of the peace. Nothing was reported stolen. Strangers and visitors marvelled at the excellent order. One cutting affray occurred in the city and arrest was made inside of five minutes. One arrest was made at the fair grounds, and aside from that no disturbance of any kind was made.

Sheriff Moore has policed the fair grounds for several years and has performed the duty well. This year common fairness demands praise from all people for the excellent service given.

Constable Staudt policed the City of Kerrville during the fair in a manner creditable to himself and to the people who elected him.

Fairness and eternal justice demand that fair-minded men be quick to praise good service as they are to censure inefficient service. To that end this article is published, and for a like reason every good citizen of Kerrville and Kerr county should be proud of the efficient police service they have.

LET us learn to be content with what we have. Let us get rid of our false estimates, set up all the higher ideals—a quiet home; vines of our own planting; a few books full of the inspiration of a genius; a few friends worthy of being loved and able to love us in turn; a hundred innocent pleasures that bring no pain or remorse, a devotion to the right that will not swerve; a simple religion empty of all bigotry, full of trust and hope and love; and of such a philosophy this world will give up all the empty joy it has—David Swing.

Wm. Roeder won some trophies on cattle. J. T. S. Gammon carried away a sheaf of blue indicators on his thoroughbred Durhams.

N. H. Skaggs, of Streeter, had Delaine sheep and Angora goats at the fair, and from the appearance of his string of stuff in the grand parade he has adopted blue for his ranch colors.

George Williams, of the Wallace Creek Country, was one of the blue ribbon winners, winning four blues and one red ribbon on five entries in the sheep department. Mr. Williams owns one of the finest flocks of high grade sheep in this section.

Ed Fleming, of Telegraph, Kimble County, won the silver cup offered by the American Angora Goat Breeder's Association. Mr. Fleming had a fine showing of Angoras here this year. This trophy went to Jas. Prentice, also a Kimble County Breeder, last year. Mr. Prentice had a fine string of animals here again this year, and carried off a lot of blue decorations.

One of the most amusing things in the long list of excellent features offered by the amusement committee, which was composed of W. G. Carpenter, Arthur Real, and A. F. Thigpen was the tackey show. The prize went to Frank Michon and Frank Heimann. The outfit was labeled "Push Mebel", and it was a killer. An old buggy with the top gone, was converted into a new kind of vehicle. The shafts were so arranged that the horse worked behind. The steering apparatus was a handspike, with a rod stuck through it, which manipulated a tackle made of grass rope and hung to the axles. The gang went wild when this remarkable equipage paraded the track.

Mr. Neal is a member of the Baptist committee to select a site and locate the new encampment grounds for Southwest Texas. He is greatly pleased with Kerrville, and thinks it probable that the committee will select this place and accept the forty acres of land offered by citizens of Kerrville.

FAIR NOTES.

H. B. King, of Boerne, had a wonderful colt in the show. The animal was only seventeen months old, but was wonderfully developed, and a perfect beauty. Mr. King is offering this prize winner, which was entered in the light harness class, for sale.

Among the interesting people who attended the fair, was Capt. Amasa Clark, a pioneer citizen of Bandera County. Capt. Clark was with General Scott in the Mexican War, and was in every engagement in which the army took part, and helped raise the United States flag in the City of Mexico. He is now eighty years old, and is hale and hearty.

R. B. Ellis, Secretary of the Caldwell County fair which will be held at Lockhart, November 8, 9, and 10, was a visitor at the Kerrville fair last week. Mr. Ellis was greatly pleased with the splendid showing made by the West Texas Fair.

J. L. McCaleb, the editor of the Carrizos Springs Javelina, spent several days in Kerrville last week. Mr. McCaleb said he knew we had a fair at Kerrville, but he never expected to see such a great enterprise here.

Very respectfully,

A Card of Thanks.

I desire, personally, to thank every member of the board of directors of the West Texas Fair for the loyal support given me in the struggle, against unusual difficulties, to make the fair a success. I also desire in behalf of the board to thank all department managers, especially the ladies and their assistants, for their able and unflagging efforts, the judges for their fair and just decisions, exhibitors for their interest and courtesy, and the whole people for their liberal attendance and patronage.

In spite of the severe drouth through which the country has passed this year, and many other untoward circumstances, the fair was an unqualified success. It grows in importance and magnitude each year. The West Texas Fair is an enterprise of the people, and we thank them for the enterprise and spirit of progress that sustains it.

Respectfully,
J. E. GRINSTEAD,
Pres. West Texas Fair Association.

The Choo-Choo Crowd

The SUN's staff photographer caught the entire "double jointed carburetor and automatic backaction exhaust club" in front of Paech's garage Thursday afternoon. There were nine in the bunch and all "home folks." If things keep on this way some fellow will have to open a joint for the sale of glass blind brides and shiny caps.

Greatest Goat Show in Texas.

F. O. Landrum, of Uvalde, who is perhaps the most prominent goat breeder in Texas was in Kerrville throughout the West Texas Fair, and took a leading part in the big goat show. Speaking of the exhibit Mr. Landrum said:

"This is easily the greatest goat show ever seen in Texas. Never before has there been an exhibition at any place in Texas such a large number of high class animals as were shown here. Indeed, the exhibit could not be excelled in America, except in point of numbers."

Fredericksburg Will Have Big Fair.

Among the prominent people who attended the fair last week was Hon. Wm. Bierschwale, of Fredericksburg, who is president of the Gillespie county fair, which will be held at Fredericksburg September 15, 16, 17. Speaking of the fair Mr. Bierschwale said:

"Preparation for a big fair is going forward smoothly, and we expect to set a new pace for county fairs in Southwest Texas. The racing will be unusually good this year, farm exhibits promise to be well up to the standard, and the stock show feature will be a winner. We are going to have a big fair."

New Business.

The Model Tailoring Company is a new business just opened in the new Rawson Building, under the management of S. W. Wallace. Mr. Wallace is an experienced tailor and will give his entire attendance to the business, of making clothes, cleaning and pressing clothes, cleaning and blocking hats, and all the work of that class usually done in a first class tailoring establishment.

At Pampell's Hall

Next Friday night, at 8:30 o'clock, September 10, Ernest B. Gatten, an elocutionist and impersonator, who was for two years employed as an entertainer by the Beulah Land Institute, will give an entertainment, assisted by home musical talent, at Pampell's Hall. This entertainment will be given under the auspices of the Methodist church. Tickets will be sold at 35 and 25 cents. Every number of the program will be a live one and in all a splendid entertainment. While you help a worthy cause you receive an evening of real pleasure. Don't miss this treat.

GENERAL MERCHANDISE

LEADERS IN LOW PRICES.

FORTY YEARS WITHOUT A FAILURE OR A FIRE
WE ALWAYS MEET OUR OBLIGATIONS

IF a looking glass was backed with quality instead of mercury, it wouldn't "Scratch," because quality is good "under the surface." Our business is backed by the quality of the goods we handle, and of the policy and method we use. If we sell an inferior article we not only rob our customer, but we rob ourself, and we won't do either.

DRY GOODS

In our Dry Goods department we make a special effort to keep abreast of the times in every detail. The women and girls of Kerrville and the "Hill Country" are entitled to as good quality and as late styles as are the women of Broadway, New York. Our buyer goes to market each season and secures the very best quality and styles that cash will buy.

CLOTHING and SHOES

We have an experienced tailor in the store and will make your clothes in the very latest style, and from the finest fabrics. Or, if you want ready-to-wear clothes, we handle the best obtainable and the price is right, considering quality. Our shoe department is a source of pride, and receives great care. We are exclusive agents for several of the best brands of shoes made in the world.

GROCERIES and SUPPLIES

Groceries, especially heavy supplies, are always handled at a small profit. We buy in car lots, save freight and otherwise reduce the cost. When you get our grocery prices you can rest assured that "If it is cheaper elsewhere, it is not so good." We make a specialty of ranch supplies and the rural store jobbing trade.

MACHINERY

We carry a very complete line of shelf and heavy hardware, stoves, cooking utensils, and all the things usually carried by a first-class hardware store. Also handle Springfield wagons, hacks, buggies, surreys; Aermotor and Sampson windmills; Collins' pump jacks; Moline disc plows; Deering binders and mowers; windmill and machine repair parts, pumps, piping, etc.
