These correct ideas and a Building Service by Na-tional experts are yours for the asking. Hundreds of modern designs are at this office ready for your attention. Step in and ask us about this Building Service.

"How the Story Grew," played by the Brownsonites at Notre Dame last Saturday, was not only a three-act comedy full of side-splitting humor, but also an instructive satire on busybodies whose tongues are too loose for the peace of the community.

The entertainment was a big success, perhaps too much so, because scores of people had to be refused admission. On Friday already, the further sale of tickets was stopped for fear of exceeding the seating accommodations. Nevertheless, on the night of the show, many patrons insisted on purchasing standing room at full value. Gross receipts will help the Brownsonites to secure another encyclopedia for their library. The seudents wish to thank the public who joined them in their Washington celebration; also. The Mountain Sun and Mr. Brice, for helpful advertisement; and Mr. Farrish, the care-taker, for constructing and wiring a stage, which he knocked down in one, two, three order without a minute's interruption in the regular class curriculum

As was to be expected, Washington Hall was highly festooned in the red, white and blue of our National colors, Streamers, shields and banners were exposed in artistic profusion. The new annex of Notre Dame made the auditorium as cool as if the program were played outdoors. If the weather does not interfere, the Notre Dame students hope to favor their friends with a campus entertainment on the vigil of May, and will then be able to seat more than twice as large an audience.

The Program

A patriotic song, as usual, was the signal for beginning the entertainment. This was also an appropriate prelude to the stately minuet danced by the High School pupils in Colonial costumes.

Miss Wilhelmina Mosel followed this with a piano solo, on the conclusion of which the Minims made their first bow to the public. Being untried novices they could not shake off all timidity, but none the less they
