Bill Ellis DDIE GUFFEE, curator of the lano Estacado Museum in lainview, gave us some ackground on the discovery of the prehistoric mammoth recently outh of Summerfield.

Guffee said that the discovery of the skull of the mammoth with the the young crops. tusks still intact was a rare find, indeed.

"Usually, you might find 18 inches of tusk, or maybe two feet (intact). When we first began to dig at the site and found the tusk that was exciting," Guffee said.

The archaeologist said that at this point, he isn't sure if the mammoth was of the wooly variety, or whether it was the Imperatur, as some of the scientists implied. Further studies need to be made, he said.

Guffee, who is associated with Wayland Baptist University in his position with the Plainview museum, explained some of the problems involved with the recent excavation, in light of the fact that the skull was discovered in a barrow ditch of a county (Castro) road. "The roads technically belong to the state, so we had to get an excavation permit before we could get serious about digging up the skull. Also, the problem everywhere is lack of money. You know how budgets have been trimmed due to the bad oil economy," Guffee added. Due to the fact that the excavation site was on the edge of a roadway, it made it very easy for the general public to come take a look, after the news got out about the "find." Guffee said he would estimate that between 4,000 and 5,000 people visited the site during the four-day excavation period. Hereford and Dimmitt schools bussed elementary children to the site for a look at the discovery. It was a chance of a lifetime for the youngsters to see such a scientific find.

Excavating the skull was simplified due to the fact that no human artifacts (spears, points, etc.) were discovered.

"If they had been, then the state would have become even more involved, and the excavators would have had to have used minute implements such as dental picks and toothbrushes. The work we accomplished in three or four days could have taken weeks or months," Guffee said.

Due to the volunteer labor, and donation of needed equipment and supplies, Guffee said the job was accomplished at very little expense. If the state had contracted out the project, the removal of the skull could have cost as much as $10,000, the Plainview archaeologist said.

The main reason the mammoth skull now rests in the Plainview museum is the fact that Guffee was the scientist who made the discovery.

The Llano Estacado Museum is a virtually new facility, dating only to 1976. "It has been a fairly wellkept secret, but we invite residents from the area to visit us at any time," said Guffee. He explained that the museum's set-up is similar to the Panhandle-Plains Museum on the WTSU campus in Canyon. Guffee hopes to do a little more probing at the site to see if more of the mammoth skeleton might be there. "The hip bones, leg bones and vertebra should be there, probably in the pasture. We also don't know if the owner wants his pasture dug up," Guffee said. The museum curator gave credit to Friona's Gordon Stokes, a Castro County employee, for helping in the excavation process. Stokes spent most of a Saturday and Sunday at the site, running a back-hoe. He also built the platform on which the skull was placed for moving.

St. Ann's Members Met Here May 24

Members of St. Ann's Society met May 24 for their regular business meeting and were surprised with a supper given by the outgoing officers. Fifteen members were present and also Father Tim, who offered prayer. It was reported that the meal was delicious and among the table decorations were fresh cut flowers.

New officers were installed and each new officer was given a challenge of her new job. The new officers were presented a flower when they were installed. Following the installation, the ladies had a business meeting to take care of old business, led by Judy Brockman.

Business concerned purchasing carpet for the church. A report and progress on the new cookbook was given by Liz Jesko, who serves as chairman.

Members who served on committees and different projects were recognized and appreciation expressed and also thanks went to the outgoing officers for their dedication and much work over the year.

New business included the quilting projects discussed by Sabina Schilling and the June project will be a quilting time. Ettie Jesko will be heading this project.

On June 14, members are urged to help clean the school building and Josie Olonzo will be in charge.

Yearbooks were presented to the members and Father Tim led in closing prayer.
