A GIANT RACE.

The remains of an ancient race of giants are being dug from the earth at the Mesa Rica, near Las Vegas, New Mexico. Those residing in that vicinity are greatly excited. From exchanges in that vicinity the following account is gained.

The first of the skeletons of the monster men was unearthed by Luciano Quintana, who with five others listened to some old traditions and began to dig.

As far back as the memory of man goes it has been common belief that certain rude stones on the mesa laid with surprising regularity marked the resting place of dead men.

The oldest inhabitants tell of hearing from their predecessors both white and red that at one time the land was peopled with men who were giants in every sense of the word. Rude implements of enormous size have been found that could not have been July 1900, Benj. F. Gumm and used by anyone with strength short of an ox.

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY.

A Love Festival That Has Survived the Progress of Civilization.

O LONG as human passions hold sway over the destinies of mankind, so long will St. Valentine's day be kept. It has survived the lapse of time, change of customs, and the progress of civilization. The day is sacred to preference, the choice of the sexes, the passion of love. It takes its name from St. Valentine, a presbyter or bishop of Rome, who was cruelly beaten with clubs and finally beheaded on the Elaminian way, in Rome, February 14, A. D. 270, during the reign of Emperor Marcus Aurelius Claudius. Valentinus was famous for his love and charity. and was early canonized, his day coming in February (named for the Greek goddess Juno-Febra), and about the same time that the Roman festival of the Lupercalia occurred, a feast observed in honor of the deities Pan and Juno.

One of the customs of this festival was that young men drew from a box a billet inscribed with the name of a maiden in the community in which he lived, each bachelor devoting himself for a twelvemonth to the service of the lady whom chance gave him, thus becoming her liege knight, if not her lover and husband. From this custom is supposed to originate the phrase "marriage is a lottery." The priests of the early church wisely kept all the festivals they could, changing their form or engrafting them on to saints' day. So, in some fashion, the godly martyr of early days became the patron saint of the heart.

The festival was established in England, Scotland and France about the Fifteenth century, and our good ancestors in Merrie England were delighted with it. Court and hovel alike honored the day with give and merriment. It was formerly the custom of the young people on the occasion of this festival to decorate themselves with flowers, wreaths and true-love knots, and gc in procession from house to house in the morning, singing such a ditty as:

"Good morrow to you, Valentine, Curl your locks as I do mine— Two before and three behind— Good morrow to you, Valentine." Who does not remember Ophelia's song: "To-morrow is St. Valentine's day, And all the morning betime, And I a maid at your window To be your Valentine."

EDITH'S VALENTINE.

ጅ By J. W. HUTCHEN. ት ት ት ትት በተከተከተ

MONG the cushions of a cozy low window seat of a cottage in a quaint New England village sits a young woman, possessed of the charms and graces of training and endowed with the rare gifts of nature that render her sex beautiful. Upon the hearth crackled and sputtered a cheerful fire, that shed its cheery warmth over the simple but comfortably furnished room. Without the snow fell noiselessly, covering the frozen earth with a winding sheet of downy whiteness.

Edith Vane sat gazing at the wintry scene, while upon her pretty face was a look akin to sadness; in her mellow, expressive eyes glistened a tear. Her thoughts, on the swift wings of love, had flown far across the sea to India, whither, four years ago, a fond lover had gone in search of fame and fortune. Four years ago he had looked into her tender eyes and whispered the old, old story, and she had promised to be true to him. He would return, he said, with trembling voice, and claim her as his wife, and she had wept tears of sadness and tears of joy-sad tears that he must leave her, and joyous tears that he would return to her some sweet day. The years rolled by, during which her greatest joy was the occasional letter, full of passionate leve, that came to her from across the sea. Each one stated: "Wait patiently, darling, I am coming soon:" but he came not. In an arm chair near the cheerful fire sat Edith's mother, busily engaged with her knitting needles. Turning to her daughter she saw the far-away, sad look in her eyes, and, with a loving mother's instinct, she knew the cause, and her heart bled for the unhappy child. "Cheer up, Edith, dear; you know this is Valentine's day, and remember we are to have the young folks here this afternoon," she said in a tone of cheerfulness, hoping to dispel the me ancholy mood of her daughter. "Yes, mother, this is Valentine's day-eagerness to entertain them Edith had almost forgotten her sorrow and longing.

With the spirit of zest and unailoyed happiness characteristic of the young people of New England they entered into the games and amusements that long custom had made familiar and appropriate, and all were happy save Edith. Though she managed to appear light-hearted there lurked in her bosom a weary longing, a heartache, that would not cease. The slips of paper bearing the names of absent ones who were to be drawn as valentines were placed in a basket, and it was passed among the laughing group. Each drew forth a slip and read the name, eager to know "who shall be my valentine." When the basket reached Edith she gently shook her head, and a sad smile passed over her face.

"Why, Miss Edith, are you not going to draw a valentine?"

"Not this time, Ralph," and as the tears came to her eyes she started to leave the room, but the door was softly opened and her mother entered, saying: "Here, Edith, is your valentine."

Edith took it with trembling hand and read: "Arthur Chalmers, Calcutta, India." She started perceptibly at the name, but turning to her mother she asked: "Why do you torture me thus, mother?" and slowly walked from the room. Arthur Chalmers, who had reached the village unannounced and unexpected, had hurried to the home of Edith's mother eager to see again the idol of his heart, and the star of hope that had guided him through the wilds of faraway India, whither he had gone in search of wealth, that he might pour it into the lap of her he loved. He had heard the happy voices in the parlor and sought first the living-room, where he knew he would find Edith's mother. He had grown rich in India and had now returned to add to his store the brightest gem of all-a beautiful wifeand then his cup of joy would be filled to overflowing. Edith crossed the hall and entered her mother's room, and, walking to the window. for she had not seen the handsome young traveler sitting in her mother's arm chair, she read again the name on the card and Arthur Chalmers saw a tear drop from her cheek upon the bit of pasteboard. He could wait no longer, and, springing toward her. he almost shouted:

"Pshaw! always keeping tab on our anniversaries. I guess you don't let any of them slip by you."

"Why should we? This is a glorious country, and-"

"The land of the free and the home of the brave," broke in the handsome fellow in his brown riding suit and broad-brimmed hat, patterned a little after cowboy style "I suppose you are going to brush the old thing up and hang it out to-morrow, and bring some of the greasers, who are not patriotic, down upon you?"

"I shall certainly let the breezes of the Brazos kiss the folds of 'Old Glory,' and I don't think 'the greasers,' as you call them will molest it."

"We'll see," laughed Conroy; "but, seriously, Mabel, I'd advise you to take it down if you see them coming from town tomorrow a little hilarious. That's a great flag, of course, the fairest and dearest banner in the world, to our way of thinking."

"Glad I am, on behalf of the flag, for your compliment, the first I have heard you pass this year, I believe," and Mabel Brewster known to many as the Rose of the Brazos unfolded the beautiful banner, hanging it gracefully over the back of a chair in a is going to send her a valentine with a big policeman in it."—Puck.

To Bridget.

I approve you, maiden mine; Be, I pray, our valentine. That is, strictly brought to book, My wife wants you for a cook. just four years ago to-day Arthur sailed for India."

"Be patient, dear-he will return, and soon, I ween; did he not say so in his last letter?"

"Yes, mother; but it has been nearly six months since I have heard from him—and, besides, all his letters contained that same indefinite promise," replied Edith, with a sigh.

"That is why I hope to see him soon, Edith, dear-now cheer up; Arthur Chalmers loves you, and if he still lives rest assured he will return and then you will be the happier for having waited."

"I will, mother, for your confiding hope has instilled in my heart its spirit; I shall try and be more cheerful."

So saying she arose and began to prepare for the Valentine party her mother had urged her to give. Her mother's words had indeed dispelled the darkness and lighted up her heart with a hope that rendered her almost happy. She left the room and soon returned with paper and scissors, and began humming a quaint love ditty as she deftly cut the paper into small bits. It had been her mother's custom to adhere to the old Scottish mode of celebrating Saint Valentine's day, and this time it had not been forgotten. The bits of paper prepared, she filled the dainty baskets with nuts, and went singing from one duty to another. By the noon hour every nook and corner of the comfortable cottage had been made more inviting by the touch of her deft fingers, untit now a spirit of congenial warmth and cheerfulness pervaded it. The piercing cold from without found no place within its wall. The pretty little parlor was cheerfulness itself, and a fit gathering place for the happy young people who were to meet there in the early afternoon.

The hours wore away, and the appointed time for the arrival of the guests came. In couples they found their way through the drifting snow and were ushered into the "Edith, my darling!" "Arthur!"

She buried her face on his manly breast, and for several moments the two lovers stood in "love's silence."

Presently she released herself from his embrace, and, raising her eyes to his, she asked: "Where did you come from, Arthur-why did you not let me know?"

"I came from India, darling, to bring you your valentine; now will you be mine?" and while her pretty eyes drooped, she whispered "Yes," scarcely audible, but the ears of love heard it, and two hearts were happy.

manner that disclosed its white stars in their field of soft azure.

"Thanks," was the reply; "but, really, 1 must be going. Am sorry I can't be with you to-morrow to help you celebrate the day."

"You won't he here, then?"

"I think not. I shall have to pass the day on the range; but, if I can, why, I'll come down toward evening. You'll have to celebrate alone unless you can induce some of the greasers to assist you."

A few moments later Jack was riding toward the west, watched by the young girl, who stood in the doorway of the home near the river, and who now and then replied to the wave of his hand with a similar use of the flag.

"Jack's patriotic, of course," she said, half aloud to herself,; "but he doesn't take to anniversaries like some other people. He thinks them a little stale. But let some one insult this flag in his presence, and there will have to be an instant apology or or a fight!"

Early the following morning Mabel, who was alone, with the exception of her widowed mother, who, being an invalid, was seated in an armchair at the window, carried the flag outdoors and hoisted it at the tip of the slender pole which had been planted in front of the Texas home for that purpose.

It was Washington's birthday, and as she stepped back and saw the winds shake out the starry folds of our nation's banner, Mabel thought of her ancestor, who had followed that same flag on famous fields under the eye of the great Washington himself. Never before had it looked so beauti ful to her. As it rose and fell in the breeze it seemed recrowned with new luster; its stars got a brighter whiteness and the crim son of the glorious stripes grew deeper be side their sisters in white.

Having hoisted the flag, which her mother could see from her seat at the window the fair girl reentered the house and went about her duties.

"Is Jack coming back?" asked the old lady, watching Mabel's quick movements.

"I think not; at least he said he feared we would have to keep the day alone,' answered Mabel, blushing a little. "You know, mother, he would have quite a ride from the ranche-"

"Yes, but Jack thinks a good deal of you child, and--

"O, we'll see enough of each other be fore long," interrupted Mabel, as the blush grew deeper on her healthy cheeks.

"And I shall be happier than ever, then,' and the speaker turned away, and, look ing from the house out over the beautiful stretch of country in sight, recalled the days of her young maidenhood when she was wooed and won by one who had given his life for the flag of our common coun try.

The day passed almost uneventfully for the two women in the Brazos home. Now and then Mabel saw a horseman passing along the road which, running near the house, led to the little town a few miles away. Every once in awhile some of the riders would tip their hats to the flag, but. for the most part, the men passed without demonstration.

"Mexicans, some of Jack's 'greasers," " the giri would murmur when she saw the latter.

Towards evening the young girl was startled by a series of wild shouts that drew her instantly to the window and thence to the door, in which she stood looking and listening.

A party of horsemen had turned from the road and were coming toward the house.

They rode the sturdy Mexican pony, and it did not take Mabel long to identify them. "We are going to have some callers," she said, calmly, turning back into the house. "The revelers are coming back from Gulch City and have turned from the road."

"Mexicans, child?"

"Some of Jack's 'greasers,' " smiled Mabel Brewster. "Don't you hear their outlandish cries?"

"They may have designs against the

The vile liquor of the frontier had fired his blood, and he was more than half fiend as the cries of his set urged him on.

"Halt!" rang out clear and sharp as the Winchester struck Mabel Brewster's shoulder and instantly covered the Mexican chief. 'The hands that raised the flag of Washington will defend it to the bitter end!"

Capt. Bustemente bit his lips, but did not stop; he seemed bent on his own destruction. Suddenly, like a lion, he sprang at the flagpole, and, as his hand went up, the weapon spoke. Shot through the shoulder-for Mabel, an adept with the Winches ter, did not want the worthless greaser's life-he reeled and staggered back to his men, who at once set up cries of vengeance "Take your leader away and leave the flag where it is!" sternly commanded Ma-"The next man who approaches it will bel. forfeit his life!"

The very mien of the beautiful young girl checked the mob. They looked from her at one another, and strong arms drew Capt: Bustemente up into his saddle.

For a moment, while Matel faced them, they looked into her face, then with a half cheer for her courage, they gave their steeds the cruel spur and she saw them vanish.

"Only a litt e of Benito Bustmente's blood, mother, but the flag of Washington still kisses the breezes!" said Mabel, as she turned back into the house. "This has been the most exciting Twenty-second we have ever had-'

"And Jack will be prouder of you than ever!" was the answer, and Mrs. Brewster. folding her daughter to her heart, thanked God that the blood of her ancestors had not run out.

Hundreds of Towns and Counties Named After George Washington.

O MAN was ever bonored so much in having states, cities, counties, towns, istands, and various other things hanied after him as Washington has seen. Countres in 29 states are known as "Washington," and 166 places to which mail is iddressed are named in his honor. There s generally at least one "Washington" in every state, and there are Washingtonville, Washington Plains, Washington Courthouse ind various other derivatives of the same name. Statistics are obtained not easily in regard to the number of streets named after he Father of His Country, Lut there is not i town of any size which does not have a Washington street or Washington avenue. there are numberless Washington parks. Alabama has quietly increased her territory by 200,000 acres of valuable timber land. The strip is on the state's southern boundary, and by right belonged to Alabama for nearly 70 years. In 1826 a survey was made to fix the boundary, but ten years later it was discovered that the eastern boundary line was a mile too short on the Chattahoochie river. For some unknown reason no attention was paid to the second survey, and the whole thing was forgotten. Recently some allusion to it was found. in old records, the question was looked up, and after the government land office had passed upon it the strip became a recognized part of the state of Alabama.

A Louisville grocer, who sleeps over his store, was startled late the other the lady in pursuit of a cook: "A night by a mysterious rapping in the fey days ago a lady in pursuit of a cellar. He knew there were some cook was interviewing and being inspirits there, but was incredulous as to others, and he suspected burglary. He telephoned for the police. Their investigation showed a plumber calmly at work. It seems he had been ordered there two days before by the water company, on application of the grocer. He was unable to come in the daytime, and finding all the doors locked had quietly let himself into the cellar through the grating in the sidewalk.

er, Mrs. Boggs, Superstition. over 70 years old, was mysteriously murdered. She lived by herself, and was sitting at a window when a shotgun charge entered her body, killing her instantly. The mystery surrounding the murder, it is claimed, has been partially cleared away by the arrest of a man named Cottrill, who is now in the county jail on suspicion of having been implicated in the murder. It brings to light a genuine case of witchcraft superstition. Cottrill is under the impression that he has suffered from supernatural power exercised by Mrs. Boggs. He claims that at times during the last three months he has been ridden by her all over Clay and Calhoun counties, in witch fashion. On one occasion the old lady's house appeared to him to be a blacksmith shop, and he was shoeing his horse there at night, when the witch appeared and told him that that would be the last night he would ever shoe the horse. Within a day or two the horse died. It is said that other neighbors of the old lady were affected with the same hallucination, and that threats were previously made to kill her. Cottrill refused to talk about the murder, but talks freely on the wrongs he thinks he suffered at the hands of the aged woman. Many cases of sickness in the neighborhood were attributed to her supernatural influence, and on several occasions it is claimed a lynching was threatened, but no one could be found with sufficient courage to lead those who fancied they had been wronged.

'I shall want you to go into the country with me,' she remarked to the mighty personage, who was eyeing her from head to foot. 'Yez. ma'am; and do yez have low-neck dinners, ma'am?' Mrs. Cook inquired. "Low-neck dinners!" What do you mean by that?' said the lady. 'Well, ma'am, do yez eat yez dinner in lowneck dresses? I hev a frind who says she'll not take no place unless the family eats in low-necks, an' I thought I wouldn't, either.' So this is what we are all coming to! Not even our domestics will endure 'plain living,' and if one wants a six dollar cook she can't have her without promising to 'eat in low-necks!'" Among the tales of a traveler brought home by certain Buffalo tourists is one which, according to the Commercial, they declare true in every particular, of a conversation between two girls from Rochester, N. Instantly the face of the young girl reddened. She knew what the half-drunken greaser is capable of doing when he has spent a mad day in a foontier town, and before going again to the door she looked toward a corner of the room where she saw something that seemed to please her.

Then she opened the door.

By this time the hilarious horde had drawn rein in front of the house, and the foremost was throwing jibes at the banner that floated grandly in the winds.

Mabel faced the band with a smile on her face.

In an instant arose the demand, accompanied by harsh words, for the lowering of the flag.

"Is that your mission?" answered Mabel. "Do you think for a moment that a Brewster will haul down the flag of Washington? I hoisted it with these hands, and they will never lower it to anyone."

"The senorita must not insult Mexicans," the flashing response.

"And Mexicans, if they are gentlemen, will not insist on pulling down the emblem of a sister republic."

A loud, derisive laugh greeted these words and told Mabel that she had wasted her effort on deaf ears.

"Bring it down, senorita, and we will tie it at our horses' heels and-

"You will do nothing of the kind," interrupted the girl. "That flag floats to-day in honor of the great man who gave it as his legacy to this country."

"Down! down! down!" screamed the half-drunken mob as they urged their horses nearer to the doorstep.

Suddenly Mabel disappeared, but for a moment on.y.

In another instant her graceful figure reappeared in the doorway and the Mexicans saw that her white hands gripped the stock of a Winchester.

There was a brighter, almost fierce, light in the young girl's eyes as she stood defiantly in the doorway, looking calmly at the group before her.

"Senorita no shoot!" laughed the besashed leader of the greaser mob.

"A hand laid on the flag-rope will an-swer that question!" was the instant re-joinder. "I thought better of you, Capt. Bustemente."

The Mexican, whom Mabel knew by sight, grinned under his sombrero, and then glanced at his companions, who seemed to wonder if he would let an American gir cow him.

All at once Capt. Bustemente sprang from the saddle and took a step toward the flagpole.

WHITE OAKS EAGLE, WHITE OAKS, N. M., THURSDAY FEB. 6.

THE NEW YORK WORLD THRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.

The Most Widely Read Newspaper In America.

Time has demonstrated that the Thrice-a-Week World stands alone in its class. Other papers have imitated its form but not its success. This is because it tells all the news all the time and tells it impartially, whether that news be political or otherwise. It is in fact almost a daily at the price of a weekly and you cannot afford to be without it.

Republican and Democrat alike can read the Thrice-a-Week World with absolute confidence in its truth.

In addition to news, it publishes first-class serial stories and other features suited to the home and fireside.

The Thrice-a-Week World's regular subscription price is only $1.00 per year and this pays for 156 papers. We offer this unequaled newspaper and WHITE OAKS EAGLE together one year for $2.00.

THE COMMONER.

[Mr. BEYAN 8 Paper.]

The Commoner has attained within six months from date of the first issue a circulation of 100, 000 copies, a record probably never equaled in the history of American periodical literature. The unparalleled growth of this paper demonstrates that there is room in the newspaper field for a national paper devoted to the dis- 20 desires a situation as teacher cussion of political, economic, and social problems. To the columns of The Commoner Mr. Bryan contributes his best efforts; and his reviews of political events as they arise from time to time can not fail to interest those who study public questions.

"The Best is the Cheapest."

Not how cheap, but how good, is the question.

The TWICE-A-WEEK REPUBLIC is not as cheap as are some so-called newspapers. But it is as cheap as it is possible to sell a first-class newspaper. It prints all the news that is worth printing. If you read it all the year round, you are posted on all the important and interesting affairs of the world. It is the best and most reliable newspaper that money and brains can produce—and those should be the distinguishing traits of the newspaper that is designed to be read by all members of the family. Subscription price, $1 a year. Any newsdealer, newspaper or postmaster will receive your subscription, or you may mail it direct to MTHE REPUBLIC, St. Louis, Mo.
