Got on to the Game

"I was killing time in Los Angeles the other day" said the drummer, "and an English friend of mine took me in tow and pulled me out to the golf links, where some kind of a tournament was doing. I couldn't see much but a lot of men and girls in bicycle suits, pulling off a go-as-youplease walking match, when all of a sudden a dub in a pair of pink pantaloons slugged out with his cane and my friend began to cheer to beat a bleacherite.

"Here,' I says; 'there's nothing to root about as I can see. Put me next.'

of withering scorn. 'Why, blawst and it', he says, 'he foozled his put, bunkered from tee, but still cinched the bogie on the hole.'

" 'Oh!' I says, 'why didn't you tell me before?' and throwing my hat in the air, I yelled as loud as the game, but I wanted to know v here my chips were."

A fair young lady in a Colorado town sauntered into a drug store 1902, at the hour of 10 o'clock in one morning to get a bath sponge, and when the young village doctor stepped forward to wait oh her it so rattled her that she asked for a sponge bath. The doctor blushed deeply and hotly,-so hotly in fact that the warmth thereof melted his gold shirt stud before he could stammer out that they

E. H. Harriman, the railroad magnate, is planning the largest colonization scheme ever attempted. His plans provide occupants for millions of acres of fertile and unocupied lands in Southern California, Texas and western Louisiana as a partial solution of the labor question. The general plan will be to send into the middle and eastern states fully 1000 colonization agents to induce imigration. Mr. Harriman is not prompted by philanthropic motives entirely, for his line, the Southern Pacific has over 3,000, 000 acres of land to dispose of in the above territory.

A Rich Silver Shipment.

An Austin dispatch to the Globe Democrat says: The largest and richest single shipment of silver ore ever received by a smelter at Monterey, Mexico, came from the Palmillo mine yesterday. It consisted of sixty tons, for which $800,000 was paid. The Palmillo mine is situated in the Parral district of Mexico, and is owned by Juan Alvarado, a multi-millionaire, who less than two years ago was a Mexican laborer. He has obtained his great wealth from this mine, which he discovered by accident.-El Paso Times.

BROKE UP THE MEETING.

Some of our southern brethren are still suffering from occasional fits of dyspepsia on account of that Booker T. Washington dinner. The convention of the Georgia Society of the Sons of the Revolution was held at Savannah a few days since. Officers of the society had been chosen for the coming year and the time came to elect five delegates to the general council of the Sons of the Revolution at Washington next April. A letter was read from the general secretary of the injured in the dynamite explosion organization suggesting that as President Roosevelt was in Washington and a member of the Georgia society it would be a compliment to name him as one of the delegates. Assistant United States District Attorney W. R. Leaken is a member of the Georgia society and he at once nominated the president as a delegate. This made trouble. One of the members arose at once and declared he would never vote for a man who entertained a negro at dinner for any office. Mr. Leaken championed the president, and the discussion became so warm that the chairman had to declare the meeting adjourned to preserve harmony. The matter is now hung up and will be acted on at a meeting to be held later.-Albuquerque Journal Democrat.

ELIA STAUNTON had gone to Florida with the intention of taking up a homestead; but had been at her brother-in-law's there three weeks now without hearing of a single vacant piece. One day he came in with a radiant face.

"I've found a prize for you, Lelia," he exclaimed. "A German who lives two miles from here has just been left a fortune at home, and is going back. He entered his claim nearly three years ago, and has made quite a lot of improvements; but of course he doesn't mind them now. He leaves this afternoon, and then the land becomes public property. I asked him if he had spoken of it to anyone, and he said only to the postmaster. He received the news this morning, and told the postmaster about it. I have been able to do him some service, and when I spoke about you he seemed pleased, and said that he would like you to have the land and the improvements. He said he would like to think of the place belonging to some of my people. Now, the sconer you file your claim, the better. I will go with you to-morrow. if you like."

"Why not at once?" asked Lelia, čagerly.

noon, and can't possibly get off. But peared, and behind him was Dick, apwe'll start early in the morning."

"That might be too late. It's only 15 miles to Gainesville. Why can't I go alone?"

"Well, I-don't know," thoughtfully. "I hardly like the idea of your going alone. Still, time is important, as you say, and the road is good, and you are a splendid rider. You could make it in three hours, and spend the night with Mrs. Wilson. Under the circumstances-"

He took a slip of paper from his pocketbook and handed it to her-"that contains all the necessary information about the homestead," he admonished. "Give it to the clerk whose name is on the back. He knows me, and will see that your entry is made correctly. Now go, and don't spare the whip."

"Lelia was a good rider, as he had said, and it was not long before she had passed through the live oaks to the main road. The stranger was not in sight.

For half an hour she sped on, the horse taking the road almost as lightly as a bird; then suddenly a piece of newspaper rattled across their path, and the horse shied violently, throwing her into the bushes.

Fortunately, she was not much hurt; but as she rose to her feet a sharp twinge told her that one of her ankles was sprained. The horse was nibbling tussock grass a few yards away.

"Dick, Dick! Come, Dick!" she coaxed, limping toward him.

But Dick was in a playful mood, and as she advanced he retreated. She followed him several rods, then he whirled and trotted back over the road they had come. Lelia watched him until he disappeared. She did not feel able to walk any farther, so she sat down upon a stone to consider. Gainesville was six miles away, her home nearly ten, and her ankle was growing worse. Clearly there was nothing to do but wait for some chance passer to come to her assistance.

An hour went by, then she heard the faint tap, tap of hoof beats in the dis-"I have an engagement this after- tance. Presently a gray horse ap-

"If you are not in a hurry," he said, "I will do my best to make the old grav keep up."

"I have the day before me, and will be glad to have company."

"Thank you." Then: "Did you enter your claim all right?"

Lelia flushed and looked at him inquiringly. He laughed frankly.

"1 recognized your horse as one I had seen in Mr. Gifford's stable, and I put one thing and another together. But don't think I harbor the least ill feeling toward the old gray," he went on, quickly, patting the animal as he spoke; "he and I are getting on famously together. "Thank you-Miss Staunton, I am a thousand times obliged to you for obtaining that land. You see, my brother was wild about my getting it, and his enthusiasm was so contagious I never paused to consider the consequences. Now, I am a lawyer, and I think I see a good opportunity down here for me to practice my profession. But suppose I had buried myself out on that homestead? Why, it would have been the extinguishing of both the profession and myself. Not but what it is a fine piece of land." hastily, "and a prize to anyone who can afford to live on it the necessary five years. But you 'see I could not do that and practice."

Lelia looked at him searchingly. "Are you in earnest?" she asked.

She looked relieved.

"I would better go," she interrupted. "Good! Now, if you will please saddle the horse, I will get ready."

Her brother-in-law's place was in the outskirts of a small town, and as he went toward the stable he heard hasty footsteps outside the fence which separated him from the street, and presently a strong, athletic figure vaunted over and came toward him.

"I beg your pardon, Mr. Gifford," the stranger said, hurriedly, "but let me have a horse for a few hours? My brother said that you kept the best horses in town."

"Not to let, though," answered Mr. Gifford, rather coldly. Who is your brother?"

"Henry Wayne, the postmaster. You see, I only reached here to-day, and Henry has been telling me something which renders my presence in Gainesville 'mperative."

"Ah!" Mr. Gifford's, "ah," was very expressive, and he looked out across his orange grove as though in search of an answer to some unspoken thought. "I am in a great hurry," hinted Mr. Wayne, after a prolonged silence, "and I will pay you well." "I want no pay," hastily. Then with a sudden change of voice: "Yes, I think I can let you have a horse, but I do not warrant his speed."

Leading the way to the stable, he pointed to a large gray.

"That is the strongest one in the stable," he said: "you can have him if you like. The black is faster, but I reserve him especially for the sidesaddle; and the two bays have been working this morning."

Five minutes later he led the black horse to the stile. Lelia was waiting. "Who was that gentleman?" she asked.

"A Mr. Wayne. He is going to Gainesville. I let him have the gray horse." "The gray horse!" she echoed, as she sprang lightly into the saddle.

"Why, that is the plow horse. He could go faster on foot." "So I think," coolly, "but I found he his face was strong and scholarly. "I met him down the road, and thought that he had run away. Ah, you are hurt," as she essayed to step forward. "Here, let me assist you." He sprang from his horse, throwing the bridle of the black over his arm as he did so. "My gray will stand all right. I am afraid his owner thought I was a poor horseman, and so gave me a steed that was safe. Easy, now; lean on me."

He assisted her to the saddle, and then examined the girths and bridle to see that everything was secure."

"Do you think you are able to go alone?" he asked.

"Oh, certainly. The bushes broke my fall. I think that my ankle will be all right by to-morrow."

"Well, then, I will not try to keep up with you. My horse is very deliberate in his movements, and I doubt if I reach town before dark. Good-by."

As she rode on, Lelia's emotions were a curious mixture of exultation and dismay. She could be first to enter a claim to the land, but in doing so she almost felt that she would be taking an unfair advantage of the man who had come to her assistance. At times she thought of stopping and waiting for him to come up, and of explaining everything, and offering him a fair race. Then she would think of her mother, and of her brother-in-law, and of the German who had said that he would like her to have the land. Of course she had a better right to it than this stranger; and of course it would be the height of folly for her to throw away any of her advantage.

But she could not quite satisfy herself; and the thought of the stranger jogging along on the old plow horse accompanied her into town. and into the land office, and grew stronger when she knew that the homestead was securely in her possession

Early the next morning she started her return trip, and soon after on leaving town overtook the old gray horse and his rider, moving slowly back toward home.
