A move to give Brady the best market in the state for products of all kind, has culminated in a bonded warehouse, and to H. P. Roddie, district and local manager for McCully Co., is due all credit for this great under-

Mr. Roddie has leased the old Frisco freight depot for his warehouse, and has bonded it under the laws of the state of Texas. This will enable him to handle any quantity of wool or other article to be stored to the best advantage, and assures the producers of the very best market in Texas. Insurance is carried on all contents of the warehouse at its present value.

Every citizen of Brady will be interested in the bonding of this Arrangements Completed for warehouse, as it will enable them to keep their products at home within reach, instead of shipping them to some market and thereby placing themselves at the mercy of operators and speculators. Mr. Roddie states that no one will benefit more by reason of the warehouse than the people of this county, and states further that he is in position now to buy or handle anything on consignment.

Amidst the gloom and grief the terrible disaster has occasioned, there is one gleam of light-the fact that "knighthood is still in flower." Men of wealth, men of position, in the face of inevitable death, worked like heroes to effect the safety of women and children, and with a smile on their faces plunged with the ship's battered hulk to their everlasting grave.

Heroes none the less, to our mind, were the members of the orchestra, and what a load of anguish must have been lifted passengers to hear the strains of that grand old hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee.
