Straws show which way the wind blows.

So it is!

You may laugh at the argument, but it is true, nevertheless; Brady and McCulloch county are prosperous-more prosperous than any point in the State of Texas; and as proof we cite the fact that in the past few weeks as many as four tourist printers have favored Brady with a visit. Straws in the wind. Straws which sometimes follow along the paths of least resistance; and again straws which are forced along certain paths by the iron hand of necessity.

Let us explain! Ordinarily Brady is asysfree from the genus commonly termed "hobo print" as the summer in Dixieland is of snow ob True there are one or two traveling printers who regularly make Brady-while upon their journeys to and fro-headed south at the first chill blast of fall, and north at the first balmy breath of spring much the same as the swallows and the robins. All of us think our own troubles the worst; yet when the last dregs in the cup are swallowed, there remain dregs still more bitter. Perchance the very ones who sympathize with us have tasted these bitterest of all human miseries.

"In a way," says Earl H. Emmons, "the horse is much like an egg, inasmuch as he is not of much value until broken. But the process of breaking an egg and breaking a horse is considerably different. In fact, breaking a horse is almost entirely dissimilar both in preparation and plot, and while breaking an egg is often exciting to a degree, and sometimes mingled with surprise and regret, still there is not that wild reckless uncertainty as to whether the breaker will come forth from the ordeal in one piece or be taken home in two baskets, such as one experiences while breaking a horse.

print" never strays this far from the beaten paths which run from the big cities of North Texas to the big cities of South Texas, for he is almost sure to pick up a day's or a week's work wherever he happens to strike a city.

So bad have conditions become, however, and so dull are the times in the larger cities, that instead of flocking toward them, the tourists are straying far from their accustomed routes, and the word of prosperity in the Brady country is luring them here just as a magnet draws a bit of steel.

So you will understand why these bits of human "straw' show which way the winds of Fortune are blowing.
