The new train schedule effective on the Frisco railway from Fort Worth to Menard, which went into effect June 1st, gives visitors here a fifty minute longer stay in the city. The morning passenger now arrives at 8:50 o'clock, or ten minutes earlier than the old schedule, and the night passenger leaves at 8:55 instead of 8:15 as heretofer, giving a forty minute later start. How Jim Went West W. C. HARBOUR

He lay where he fell in No Man's Land, Where the grass was sere and brown; When the world blew up with a monstrous crash, And the darkness had settled down; He sought to rise as his comrades passed. But his legs would not obey. And he grimly smiled as he realized They were lying ten yards away.

Then he thought of paths those feet had trod Since he stood at his mother's knee; He smiled as he thought of his first stone bruise, And the sting of a bumblebee; He remembered the first pair of red-topped boots, That covered his legs of tan And how proud he was when his mother said He was now a grown-up man.

His mother! Ah, yes, he remembered her, With her smiling, comely face; But many the years and miles he'd trod Away from her resting place But memories came trooping past; He felt the touch of her hand As he lay, a broken, huddled heap, In the heart of No Man's Land.

He opened his eyes as the sky grew bright, And saw her beckoning him, With arms outstretched at a portal wide, Awaiting her little Jim; So he hastened away, like a child at play, And he ran to his mother's side; And the huddled heap that he left asleep Was the only thing that died.
