WARNING!

Due to the continued drouth a local veterinarian is warning stock owners about pasturing present feed crops. Sudan, Johnson grass and grain sorghums are generating a poison (changes in starch and sugar content of the plants) that is extremely dangerous to live stock and has already caused the death of a number of cattle. Owners are warned not to turn stock into pasture at this time because of this danger.

If the stock has been pasturing the crop for the past month they have probably become immune to the poison. But if not, death some times results within two hours. This poison will remain in the plants until rain comes and the new growth eliminates it.

SYNOPSIS: — Driving west to marry Katherine Grant, Joe Wilson is arrested on suspicion of being one of the kidnapers of a young girl. Infuriated townsfolk storm the jail. Katherine, learning of his arrest, arrives as the jail has been fired, and faints. Dynamite tears off the door of his cell, and Joe escapes back to Chicago, legally dead. The actual kidnapers are caught. Joe sends his brothers west to file murder charges against members of the mob, but the District Attorney can't find one person who will admit Joe was in the jail when it was burned — and he has to go.

Chapter Five
THE CLINCHING EVIDENCE

Because of the nation-wide prominence that had been given by the newspapers and the radio to the Peabody kidnaping and the burning of an innocent man in the jail, Judge Daniel Hopkins permitted the trial to be broadcast. . . . Joe Wilson could not remain so far away as Chicago; he came to Capital City and went into hiding in a room his brothers had found for him. He had a radio put in so he could listen in on the trial.

"How can you be sure this is the ring you gave him?"

Witness after witness was called by the District Attorney in the attempt to prove the presence of the men charged with murder in the mob that had stormed, burned and dynamited the jail. The state's witnesses swore to alibis for the men on trial. Even Sheriff Hummel swore — though the perjurer came always fond of them. I went to Sycamore Corners to meet him, stopping on the way to remind the minister that Joe and I would be there at four o'clock to be married. We'd been away from each other for more than a year, and I loved him so.

She told how she had learned that he was in jail as a kidnap suspect, how she got to Sage and looked up from beside the lamp-post.

"I saw him in the burning window, behind the bars, his poor face . . . The mob was screaming 'There he is!' They threw stones, hitting him, driving him back from the window — back into the flames."

Defense lawyers tried to shake her testimony, to get her to admit that she was so unstrung and nervous that she expected to see Joe Wilson in that jail and that what she thought she saw was nothing but a hallucination. They were unable to shake her.

"Under the law," said an associate defense attorney, "lives must not be taken on assumption, but on facts. Where is the corpse of Joseph Wilson?"

"Before the jail site was cold," said the District Attorney, "witnesses testified that they cleaned it up and dumped the ashes into the river. In that way they got rid of the body of their victim."

"The law is that a corpus delicti, or at least fragments of a human body, or articles known to have been worn by him, must be proved. It has not been proved that Joseph Wilson is dead. It cannot be proved. He may have escaped and be alive today — perhaps with his memory gone. In the absence of convincing proof of corpus delicti, Your Honor, I move that this indictment be set aside and the charge against these defendants be dismissed."

"I shall take the motion for dismissal under advisement," said Judge Hopkins, "until tomorrow. I will hear the State's arguments then."

The defendants were in a jubilant mood when they were brought into court the next day.

When the court was finally called to order, the Judge addressed the jurors: "Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I have received an object, which, if authentic, must be considered in evidence in this case. Its authenticity you must decide for yourselves. Over objection of the defense, I have asked the District Attorney to present it to you."

The District Attorney explained that the object had come in a special delivery letter addressed to the Judge. It had come with a communication formed with letters cut out of a newspaper and pasted up. He read the communication: "I can't hide the truth any longer. I am a citizen of Sage, who helped clean up the jail mess. In the ashes I found this enclosed ring. Nobody knew it, so I was keeping it for a moment—moment, but it is upsetting my conscience, so I am getting it off my chest. I don't dare sign this or I might get lynched myself. Inside the ring is an engraved inscription, 'Henry to K . . . I can't decipher the rest except in a different style of engraving. . . . to Joe.'"

Defense objection to introducing an anonymous letter as evidence was sustained, and the District Attorney recalled Katherine Grant to the stand. "Have you ever seen this ring before?" he asked.

"Yes," she replied after examining it.

"Where? And when?"

"In the railroad station in Chicago, as I was leaving to come here. It was my mother's wedding ring. I gave it to Joe. He put it on his little finger."

"How can you be sure this is the ring you gave him?"

"I had engraved in it, 'Henry to Katherine.' Henry was my father's name. My mother's name was Katherine. After the 'Katherine' in the ring I had engraved 'to Joe and—'"

A woman's hysterical scream interrupted. She was one of the defendants. "We did it! We did it! Tell her to stop!"

The rest of the defendants, overcome by panic, seized her, tried to pull her down and quiet her, but she continued her hysterical confession.

"I can't stand it any more! I want to confess! I threw stones at him — I helped kill him! We all helped kill him! We're all guilty!" She tried to pull away from restraining hands, to go to Katherine. "Let me talk to her, let me tell her I didn't mean . . . Forgive me! Oh, please forgive me! Forgive us all! We didn't know . . ."

"There is your answer to this case," said the District Attorney. "Your Honor, the State rests."

Katherine, dazed, sickened, confused, lowered her eyes. They came to rest upon the communication which had accompanied the ring, were fixed upon a word made of printed letters, pasted together; the word was "momentum." Still dazed, more confused than ever, she was taken out of the court room by Charlie and Tom into a corridor.

Tom was wearing a raincoat just like Joe's! Her glance wandered down to the pocket. It had been half torn out and sewed up — with blue thread! She had sewn Joe's torn pocket with blue thread!

"Why didn't you tell me Joe's alive?" she asked.

WARNER BAXTER SCORES HIT AS AVENGING REBEL

Lifted bodily from the most romantic era of America's frontier history, "Robin Hood of El Dorado," starring Warner Baxter, comes to the screen of the Palace Theatre Sunday and Monday to take its place among the truly magnificent achievements of the talking screen.

It is an outdoor epic reminiscent of "The Covered Wagon," "The Big Trail," and other spectacular photographs which stand as milestones of motion picture progress.

Painted with spectacular strokes on a tremendous canvas, it still finds opportunity to deal with the heartaches, the romances, the joys and the sorrows of an absorbing character—the historic Joaquin Murrieta who left his name written large on the early history of the Far West.

Warner Baxter turns in the greatest characterization of his career as the dashing good-bad man who rode like an avenging angel through the roaring gold towns of California in the days of '49 men. It is a role that blends romance with fierceness, tenderness with hate, and to it Baxter, adds a delightful charm that is certain to captivate feminine hearts.

In the supporting cast are several players who contribute outstanding performances—Ann Loring, a newcomer who demonstrates a dramatic depth that seems to destine her for the heights; Margo, the Spanish dancing beauty who has become a splendid dramatic actress; Bruce Cabot, J. Carroll Nash, Eric Linden, Edgar Kennedy, Charles Trowbridge, Harvey Stephens and many others.

The picture is spectacularly produced, abounds with thrills and romance, and is entertainment that can be recommended heartily. It was produced by John W. Considine, Jr., and directed by William Wellman and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

LET'S JUST SUPPOSE

By Farmer Doolittle

Of all the men we've ever seen, And that's not been just a few, Who gave as a reason for being unclean, Is just because he wanted to.

Suppose he makes a cigarette, Or smokes a pipe or chew, He does not have the least regret, Its just because he wanted to.

Suppose he drinks a mild "root beer" Or a glass of old home brew, He does not have the least of fear, It's just because he wanted to.

Does he not thing of the in-flu-ence Or the wrong that he may do? To the young or of the great expense Is it just because he wanted to?

Suppose he parts a pair that's wed, Or wrecks the lives of two, Or robs some of their daily bread, Is it just because he wanted to?

Suppose he fails to reach the promised land, And down to Purgatory goes, It will be because he wasn't a righteous man, And did wrong just because he wanted to.

ing, Barry mentioned his Harlem theory.
Peter listened intently.
"Well," he said, "you are a Hawkshaw."
"You'd be surprised if I landed Mrs. Kelly, wouldn't you?"
"No," Peter replied, smiling again, "but I'd be terribly surprised if you didn't begin suspecting someone else ten minutes afterward."

CHAPTER VIII

The more Barry thought of it, the more certain he became that the Judge's story, and the revelations in Harlem, removed the only reason for questioning Harwood's hypothesis. When the divorce action was filed, Kelly had promised not to see Betty Barclay again. That promise had induced the withdrawal of the petition. And then Betty Barclay had phoned, while Kelly was out, and just as Mrs. Kelly was going. In Harwood's own words, Mrs. Kelly "went wild." Failing to get legal counsel, she taxed to Harlem, and there she got "madder and madder." Just after midnight, she drove home, and found Kelly alone—drunk, and with the accumulated wrath engendered by two trying interviews. There were words, and a handy decanter.

The design began being almost too nearly perfect.
He found Peggy doing some mending in her dingy room. She had lost flesh, and seemed to be always staring at nothing. "It's Jacky," she confided in Barry. "I'm worried about him."

The youngster looked pale and ill.
"Look here, Peg; will you have lunch with me tomorrow at the Astor? I want you to meet somebody."
"Miss Hambidge?"
"Yes."
"She'd turn up her nose at me like an elephant reaching for peanuts."
"I don't think so. Anyway, I want you to know each other."

The appointment was made, at last—one o'clock—and Barry called Pat.
"Well, the trail's hot, all right."
"Tell me about it."
"I don't dare over the wire. You know; operators. Come in and lunch with me?"
"When?"
"Tomorrow at one."

Pat was eagerly anxious to hear his news, and there was no other way. But, if Pat's nose remained static when she learned she was to encounter Peggy, her mouth straightened.
"Why? What have I in common with this girl?"
"Well," Barry answered, flatly, "you're keeping her husband in prison."
Pat flushed.

"You owe her something for that, don't you think? What're you being so high hat about? This girl's Mrs. John Clarke Ridder, Jr., you know."
"I'm not being high hat. Only, naturally, just now, I don't feel much like meeting strangers. Especially strangers with whom I have no community of interest."

Lunching together, however, it soon became evident that there was a "community of interest." Pat warmed to her husband exactly as Pat was fearful for her father. Though Peg didn't know it, their fate hung on the same thread. Both heard Barry's account of his discoveries with regard to Mrs. Kelly.

"It seems pretty conclusive," Pat said.
"I never thought of that dame—I mean, woman," Peg added. "Would that get Jack off quick?"
Barry explained his understanding that, if there were definite proof of another person's having committed a crime, anyone in custody was released immediately. "The district attorney moves for a dismissal of the indictment, I believe," he told them.

"Gee!" Peggy said, with the tears in her eyes.
Pat was no fool, and she found herself respecting and liking this "night club hooper." She was Mrs. Ridder, after all. "Whoever the girl might have been, it was the tears beginning to dissolve the beads that stirred Pat. She had never seen anyone cry that way before—cry with her lips twisted into a smile."
"You've certainly stuck to your husband," Pat observed.

"Why not? When you really love anybody, you don't care what they do, or have done, or what they are. It's what they are to you that counts. You're not thinking what you're going to get, but what you're going to give. That is, the right kind of girl is."
"Gosh, she's trying to help me with Pat," Barry thought.

The upshot was that Pat took Peg and the youngster to Southampton the next morning. "Peter suggested it," she told Barry. "And, of course, you're right—I do owe them something."
It wasn't the debt that did it, Barry realized. It was Jacky. Peg wanted

Patricia to see him, and the house was so near. There really wasn't any good excuse for not going. So, for the first time in her life, Pat sniffed fried fish in an entrance hall, and tripped on worn stair carpets, and found herself stifling in a back room without air or sunshine. She'd known people lived like that, of course, but, somehow, she'd never thought much about it. She found herself thinking now, "If I had to spend one night in this place—That's what's the matter with the boy."
It was arranged that Evans was to drive them out, and come back for Barry on Thursday.

When Barry left Pat at her hotel, she said, "You seem to be everybody's friend, Mr. Gilbert. It's a little hard to understand, considering—"
"Considering that I'm an adventurer and an imposter?"
"Yes."
"Yes," Barry repeated, "but that's how you learn what friendship means." That night, Barry went to the Coconut Bar.

"I mustn't overlook anything," he reflected.
There wasn't much to overlook in the Coconut Bar. Not in the way of clothing, at all events. The lobby was full of men, more or less surreptitiously glancing at framed photographs of girls whose costumes might almost have been packed in a vanity case. Inside was a square dancing floor with tables about it, like the seats about a prize ring. Above, there was a balcony with more tables, except at one spot, occupied by offices.

There were three shows a night, the amateur Hawkshaw discovered from his menu—at seven, eleven, and one. It wasn't hard to get acquainted with any of the girls. One had only to look prosperous, and incline his head an inch or two in the direction of a vacant chair. "We're not supposed to do this," Violet Fane informed Barry, "but Luis's got a swell stand-in."
Barry had his expense account and his ingratiating grin, and used both to the limit. It wasn't long before the blonde was telling the story of her life. "I bin with Luis ever since I was a kid," she bragged. "He's a swell guy. You oughta know him. I'll give you a tumble after the next show."

Luis was most affable. A sentimentalist, but a business man, with a keen eye to spenders, and a withering contempt for tight-wads.
A flashy young fellow, Morano was, who wore sporty clothes, and much jewelry. Slim and dapper, his shining ebon hair was slicked back from his forehead. He had a long, thin nose, and straight, thin lips, and a slight but rather curious impediment in his speech. His voice could be very soft at times.

"Tender hearted, Luis is," Miss Fane declared later. "I've seen him cry when somebody sang about mother, or the kid, or sumpin'. That loved-her-and-lost-her stuff specially. He was married once."
"Didn't it take?"
"Sure, it took. That's why he cries. The Jane died, or sumpin'. Know what Luis did—when he got the coin, I mean? Bought the house they used to live in, and went on livin' there—alone, with a couple of servants."

"Gee!"
"Ain't that romantic? I'll say so! He's still got the servants, too. They all moved to a farm, somewhere in Jersey, a couple'a years ago. Would you believe it—he drives out every morning, after the last show. Nuts about horses, Luis is. Not to bet on. Just likes 'em."
"Learned about horses in Fauquier county," Luis said, returning at that instant. "I lived there 'til I was nineteen, and that's all they know. Go on, Vi; you'll be late."

"I never was late for a show yet," she retorted. "Nor out of one. Not in all the years I've worked for you."
"That's straight," Morano admitted, as she was leaving. "Never been out of a show in her life. She's a swell girl, Vi."
There wasn't much to be got at the Coconut Bar; not that Violet and Morano weren't willing to talk. Morano's romance had left him a gentle melancholy—or, perhaps, he was only worried about business. But, if he had anything to conceal, it certainly seemed to have no relation to Kelly. On that subject, everything was open and above board.

"Just a gorilla," Morano said of the Big Boss, the next night, when Barry returned to the Coconut Bar.
"Oh, Mike was a right," Miss Fane protested.
"Sure!" her employer agreed. "He wouldn't do nothing worse than steal pennies from a dead baby. Pal of Vi's though," Luis added, winking at Barry.

"Yeh," Violet declared, dryly; "until that Barclay dame came along."
"He was in here that evening, wasn't he?" Barry asked.
"Yeh. Just a few hours before they croaked him."
"He had a girl pinched, or something?"
"Yeh," Morano repeated. "Nice kid, too. Took her around to the station in them things."
"I don't blame the Jane's husband for getting sore," Morano continued, "though bumping a guy off for that's going a little too far."

"Kelly was soused," Miss Fane said.
"Yeh. Plenty. And he thought the kid was picking his pocket. Nothin' to it."
"Wasting my time," Barry told Harwood, the next morning, in the city editor's busy office at The Globe. "My time, and nearly a hundred dollars of the paper's money. Winslow had it straight. The Fane girl was strutting her stuff from one o'clock until long after the murder."
"Well, it's good to be sure."
"Yes, and I'm mighty sure now. Every step I've taken since our last meeting leads right up to Mrs. Kelly."

Harwood looked at him quizzically. "Step No. 1?" he asked.
"My advertisement offering a reward for the number of the cab that killed that artist's wife."
"You don't mean that you got it?"
Triumphantly, Barry opened his note book.
"There it is," he said. "026017. The figures under it are the number of the driver who gave me the information." Ernie copied both numbers.
"Swell work," he commented. "Anything else?"
"Lots. This fellow had a passenger who got out at Twenty-third street around midnight. When the woman was killed—two hours later—the driver bumped into him again in Sixteenth street, very much rattled, and looking as though he'd committed a murder."
"Any description?"
"Rather a vague one. That doesn't matter. I'm sure, in my own mind, that this passenger was the caller Kelly expected, and that he wasn't the murderer. I'm equally sure that he knew murder had been committed."
"Let's call it a mere supposition. In that case, Kelly was killed around two o'clock. At two o'clock, Mrs. Kelly wasn't in Harlem."
"How do you know that?"
Barry's answer was a full report of his adventures of Saturday. "Without Step No. 1, Step No. 2 means nothing. In other words, if Kelly'd been killed at midnight—which is the theory everyone's worked on—Mrs. Kelly's alibi would have been holeproof."
Harwood joined his finger-tips in an almost prayerful gesture. "I wish we could find the guy who looked as though he'd committed a murder!"

Barry made no reply.
"That's always the trouble," the city editor went on. "What kind of a skate is this Luis Morano? Tough?"
"On the contrary. Cries over a mammy song."
"There's a heap of 'em do," Harwood philosophized.
"He's a Southerner, with a soft voice, and a funny impediment in his speech?"
"That so?" Harwood inquired.
"Where is this Coconut Bar?"
Barry told him, and promptly returned to Mrs. Kelly. "How the deuce are we going to prove what she did after she got home?"
"That's up to you," Ernie said. "I'm off on a new tack now." His eyes twinkled. "One that would go a long way toward establishing your theory of coincidence. Gosh, I'd give my two uppers to break this story within the next week or two."

Thursday evening, Barry spent in his room, mostly thinking. He had telephoned Pat twice since their luncheon together, and found her enthusiastic over her guests. "There's nothing wrong with the boy," she declared; "nothing that a few weeks out here won't cure. He's on the beach now, with his mother."
Judge Hambidge had taken to the little fellow at once. Almost like having a grandchild. It kept his mind off his worries. And no one could see Peggy, being brave, but always staring at nothing, always thinking of what might happen, without pity that warmed into affection. "She's really an awfully good sort," Pat said, from Southampton. "I like her a lot. When are you coming out?"
"Tomorrow, I hope."
"Well, we'll expect you for dinner." That breach was healed, all right. Pat had called him "the scum of the earth." In the same hour, he remembered again, he had told her he loved her. As to that, she still maintained silence. "That's the kindest thing she could do," Barry thought. "A Judge's daughter, and I—"

Barry had learned not to think of the future. "Nor heed the rumble of a distant drum," as his own father had put it. Just for now, it was pleasant to be somebody who knew Pat—and he wanted to take that awful look out of the other girl's eyes. "That oughtn't to be hard now," Barry thought. "If I could get that Filipino to talk. He knows when Mrs. Kelly came home, and he's probably got a darned good idea what she did afterward. If we could get to that Oriental—"

At which point, Evans came, and he had been drinking.
"Sorry, sir," he apologized, taking the nearest chair. Evans had none of Willett's compunctions. "Sorry, sir, but I've been having dinner with Kelly's chauffeur."
"Liquid nourishment?"
"Yes, sir," Evans admitted, sheepishly. "But that was the only chance I had with that Irishman."
"Well?"

Suzie Trent, American chorus girl, stranded in London in the summer of 1914, is befriended by Terry Moore, young inventor. He loves her and insists on her marrying him, despite her protest that all she feels for him is a deep affection. They have just returned to Terry's lodgings after being married, when a mysterious woman shoots Terry. Suzie in a panic, thinks him dead, and makes her escape to a friend in Paris.

Chapter Two

"And so you see," said Suzie after she had finished the whole story. "I must go back. I was crazy to run away. I had done nothing. But by losing my head, I made myself out the murderer. And how could I ever have deserted Terry? I'm taking the first boat back."

"You're staying right here," said Maizie firmly. "You're in no danger—no one but that goofy landlady ever thought you did it. By now they probably have the real murderer. And as for the other," she said gently, "what help would it be to Terry? You didn't run until you knew there was nothing to do."

Suzie was too weak to stand out against Maizie's common sense. For days she couldn't have gone, if she had wanted to. Part of the time she was delirious and all the time she had to stay in bed and have careful nursing. She talked of Terry all the time when her mind was wandering. When she grew better, she never mentioned him. But Maizie knew she had not forgotten him and that she could not put out of her mind that last horrible hour she had been with them. The first time she went to the cafe with Maizie—the manager had said he would take her into the show, if she was as good as her friend had thought you did it. She slipped suddenly just as she was coming out on the floor from the dressing room.

"Why do they have English policemen in Paris?" she gasped.

"If Scotland Yard had wanted you, they'd have had you long ago," said Maizie. "Anyway, that's not a cop—it's an officer. Have you forgotten, my dear, that there is something called war going on in these parts?"

"Well, I wish we were back in the U. S. A.," said Suzie.

"That's where we're going, if we can ever get passage. But with everybody as scared as you, 'no can go.' Anyway, this war can't last long—before we know it, everything will be hunky-dory again."

By the time Maizie's statement as to the duration of the war had been proved wrong, Suzie didn't want to go back to New York, ever. The reason was Andre Charville. That she should be in love with him was easy to understand. She had never known anyone like him, for one thing. Maizie, when she sensed the drift of things, warned her that it was high time they did go home. Assuredly, Andre was as fascinating, as brilliant as Suzie thought him. Even the fact that he was not a Frenchman, when she thought of his escapades wouldn't matter, if only he were not French. His family was one of the old aristocracy; he could never marry outside his class.

Perhaps if Suzie had not shown within an hour, such spirit and such fear, Andre might have forgotten her, as he had other girls before. He was interested when she slapped him angrily the night they met. They had been dancing together and he told her lightly that he had asked her because a flip of a coin had decided the matter. It was a new experience for him. He liked fearlessness. He had gone back to the table to rejoin the other aviators with whom he had come, when there was the sound of an explosion from above. There was a mad scramble to the cellar—the long-feared air-raid had come. His first thought was for the spirited little American. He found her cowering in a corner. They were the last to reach the comparative safety underground.

During the frenzy of that night, Suzie was beside him, clinging to his arm. He liked dependent women, he decided.

There were a few more days before Andre had to go back to the flying field and every night he was at the cafe. They laughed and danced together and talked of many things, but they never mentioned the slap nor the horror of the air-raid.

How deeply Suzie cared she did not know herself, until Maizie came home one day and said at last they had secured sailings. They'd better go, while they could, she said—it looked as if this war might go on forever. It was five days before they were to leave but Suzie did not tell Andre, until the last night. They had gone for a long walk, had climbed up the heights of Montmartre to see the moonlight blend in to dawn. He was silent for a minute and then agreed with her they must hurry back or Maizie would be hurrying about Suzie Trent who had come from an orphanage, ever look on it as home? Strangely enough, it was to seem to her, home; and the strangest part of it was that Baron Charville, not Andre, was what made it so. At first, there had been restraint between them. Although the old man was courteous itself, he was deeply disappointed at his son's marriage and his formal manner made Suzie self-conscious. But during the weeks they spent alone in the house, except for the servants, they came to like and admire each other. Their love and anxiety for Andre, their pride in his brilliant record in the flying corps was what brought them together.

There was something else, which they never put into words. Andre wrote Suzie rarely. Worse than that, when he was on leave, he was home very little. It was tacitly accepted that he spent most of the days and evenings at the War Office. Suzie wondered if it were necessary. The Baron knew it was not. When he seriously hurt—a few days in the hospital and he would be quite all right—but the Baron insisted Suzie should go to him. She set out, laden with a big hamper of delicacies for the invalid.

When she alighted at the station, she heard some one saying that the English planes had just come. That was good news. It meant less danger for Andre, less anxiety for herself and Andre's father.

She found Andre sitting up in a wheel chair and they prepared to have a feast. On the table was a big vase of flowers and Suzie, making a false movement, knocked it over. She ran out of the room, to get a broom and another vase, but she had difficulty in finding an attendant to help her. When she returned, there was a man in the room. She hesitated but Andre called to her to come in.

"I want you to meet Captain Moore, my dear," he said. "Terry, this is my wife."

Suzie did not scream, she did not

All that Andre noticed was that Suzie looked "as if she had seen a ghost."

missing the boat train. He drove to the station with them, and as the train pulled out through the long shed, he stood waving his cap at them.

He walked through the dingy station. He had an appointment with some friends and he must hurry, to keep it. But he walked in the opposite direction. He didn't understand it, himself—what he was going to do. All he knew was that he must do it.

The two girls were just walking up the gangplank, when they heard Andre's voice.

"Thank heaven for planes," he said in answer to their amazement. "Now I know why they were invented—to beat trains. Sorry, Maizie, but you'll have to sail without Suzie—unless of course she insists. I can't let her go."

They spent a week in a Normandy village, secluded and quiet even in war time, before they went back to Paris. Those were idyllic days, though each of them secretly dreaded facing Andre's father. Suzie knew that Andre was an only child and that his mother had died years before. He knew only that she was an orphan. She wished that she had told him of Terry. She didn't like the idea of their having secrets from each other. But she could tell herself honestly that she had been so carried on by the swiftness of their courtship and marriage, that she had not thought of what she should have told him, until it was too late.

The beautiful old Charville house in the Faubourg St. Germain, was frightening to Suzie when they drove up to it. She had not expected such magnificence. How could she was home, he was so charming, so attentive, that Suzie's fears would vanish. What had she to fear, she would ask herself at times. The heart of the older man went out to her when he sensed that she was unhappy and worried about other things than the hazards of war.

But all the days were not burdened with fears and heartaches. There was, for instance, the day that Andre was being decorated for valor and courage beyond the call of duty. The Baron had been ill, but he reproached himself for not having insisted on Suzie's going to witness and share in Andre's triumph. For his peace of mind, it was as well that he did not know that another woman was at the flying field that day—Madame de Charville. Andre and she had known each other but a few weeks—she had a chateau near the village—but they had spent much time together.

Andre's brilliant flying had been the more remarkable, because the planes the French were using were not all they might have been. But that would soon be a closed chapter, he wrote in one of his infrequent letters. Some modern ships were to be flown over from England—they were said to be the best ever made. Suzie's heart missed a beat when she read that. Poor, dear Terry—dying before his invention was perfected. But it wasn't altogether tragic. He had so big a nature, he would be glad if only he could know that some one else had done his work, would have the glory of it.

Then one day, just before the new planes were to come, Andre crashed. The wire said he was not faint, she did not drop the vase over. Terry bowed and managed to make one of the polite remarks called for by an introduction. All that Andre noticed was that Suzie looked "as if she had seen a ghost."

She said something of the kind had happened—she thought a man was dead, but he wasn't. Andre replied that the corridors of hospitals were apt to present terrible sights and suggested that Terry should take Suzie to the hotel. It was getting late and after her journey she must be tired.

"Terry," said Suzie, as they reached the hotel, "I thought you were dead. I wouldn't have run away if I hadn't lost my head in the horror. I was a rank coward."

Terry looked ahead stonily. He said nothing.

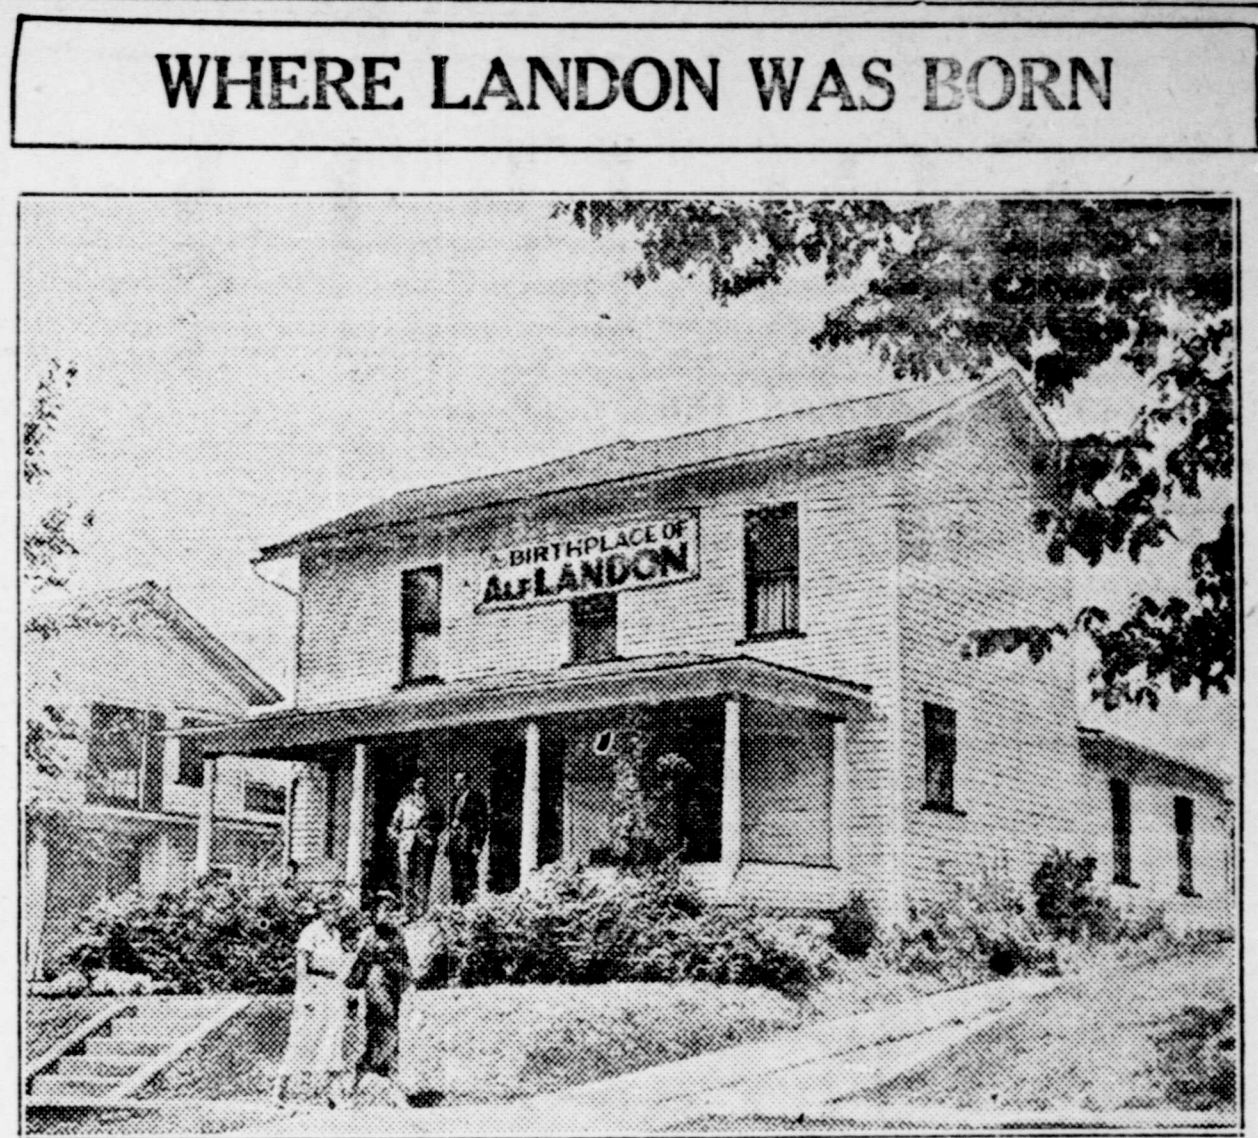

"What are you going to do?" she asked in a low voice, shot through with horror.

"I shall do nothing—of course," he said. "What can I do? You, of course, will do the wisest thing. You always do. You're a pretty poor specimen of a human being, in my opinion; but you are not dumb. You have a better head on you than I—you see, you were right about that little episode at the factory. They were spies."

"Then—you have no more to say to me, Terry?"

"Only this—I hope we shall never see each other again, Madame Charville."

stock intact.

This stock must be distributed so that each of the five thousand odd Pullman cars in service has the quantity it requires. And as the five thousand cars travel some 3,000,000 miles a day, allowances must be made for picking up this linen stock on the fly from over 100 railway supply depots located throughout the country.

Each car carries 400 towels in its lockers, 250 sheets, 200 pillow slips, 56 blankets and eight porters coats. Simple multiplication will show the size of the washings.

The same operation will show why the Pullman Company is believed to be the World's Largest Housekeeper, and with reduced rail Pullman travel costs in effect since the first of June, creating increased rail traffic thru out the country, the job becomes greater every day.

WORLD'S GR6ATEST HOUSEKEEPER DOES NOT KEEP HOUSE

Chicago—The Pullman Company, operators of sleeping cars on the railroads of America, annually "sleep" on the average one fifth of the population of the United States it was revealed today in a letter received by Harry G. Taylor, Chairman of the Western Association of Railway Executives.

Mr. Taylor was formerly a weekly newspaper editor publishing for ten years the Nonpareil at Central City, Nebraska.

And with this huge overnight sleeping population to care for, the company has become one of the greatest housekeepers in the world, despite the fact that it does not keep house.

The company has nearly four million towels on hand at all times. There are over two million sheets, one and three quarter million pillow slips, five hundred thousand blankets, a similar number of pillows, 250,000 mattresses, and the porter who tends these things has over one hundred and fifty thousand white jackets on hand for his own dress.

In all, the linen stock kept on hand by the "world's largest housekeeper" totals close to nine million pieces.

After digesting this figure of nine million pieces of linen always on hand, add to that the figure 2,000,000 which is the annual number of replacements made to keep this huge

WHAT IS MAN?

We are all familiar with this question yet it contains Truths that have never been told and we are far from being able to unfold them yet still there are certain facts about man that each one should know and think about. The more we know about WHO and WHAT we are the more help it is to us. Man was created in the likeness and image of God, then man originally and naturally was Spiritual and we find that God was well pleased with him, pronounced him good and very good. Again we find where Spiritual was given a Mortal temple in which to live and God was grieved that he had thus made man. That mortal is the cause of the cross with all the havoc that followed.

This Temple can be reduced to a small quantity of lime salts. We can not say that is man, no, even if it does compose the most wonderful piece of machinery ever put into operation. Man is the caretaker or superintendent of that machinery and if he needs a specialist calls upon the creator. Now I have no reference to tooth ache or sickness but to the question of RIGHT or WRONG. Some might prefer this question, how do you know he is there? I will answer this way, how do you know that the wind blows?

I might say that man in a developed stage is self determination plus the gift of God.

So with joy and gladness I let the wheat (the spirit) and the tares (mortality) grow together till harvest.

Paul said, "When I would do good evil was present." And so it is with you and I. Which is the ruler? A wise man ruleth in his house.

The good things we do are the materializing demonstrations of God through man. Then the more good we do the more God is magnified and no man deserves any credit for discharging his duty. "Not of good works lest any man should boast."

What is man? In his true sense he is life spirit. As you look at your child you say "flesh of my flesh, bone of my bone." Then as God looks at you he can say "Life of my life and spirit of my spirit." Then we see folks who act like they are ashamed of that fact that want to make it appear that they are all there is to it.

Had it not been for Him I would not be here and I have opportunities that the Angels in Heaven are deprived of and instead of trying to burden some one else with my Cross I'd rather choose to shoulder it like a hero and press on to the reward I am now enjoying the sunshine. If here, I am going to enjoy the rain when it comes, and I am going to enjoy the beyond when I get there.

SOUTHWESTERN STATES PAROLE CONFERENCE

Austin, August 11.—The eyes of the nation have been turned on Texas and Governor James V. Allred's novel experiment in setting up volunteer county parole boards to handle paroled convicts, it was declared today by W. W. Halcomb of the State Department, in charge of detail work in handling the county boards.

As a result of this interest Governor Allred, at the insistence of national leaders, has called the First Southwestern States Parole Conference which will be held in Galveston September 2nd and third. Model State laws governing parole as well as interstate supervision and uniform procedures for release of men from penal institutions will be discussed thoroughly. The theme of the conference will be: "Breaking the Vicious Circle of Crime." It is expected that as a result of the conference the delegates will be in a position to suggest helpful legislation in their respective states.

Five Governors, other than Governor Allred, have either expressed their intentions of attending or sending representatives. These are the Governors of: Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Arizona. Prison and parole officials of the participating States and the Attorney Generals will likewise be present. Arrangements for the entertainment at Galveston are under the direction of C. P. Evans, Chairman of the Galveston County Parole Board. Governor Allred will, of course, be the host for the occasion joined by Attorney General Wm. C. McCraw. Program arrangements are in charge of W. W. Halcomb.

Among the distinguished guests who have declared their intention of attending is Warden Lewis Lawes of Sing Sing Prison. Ray L. Huff, National Parole Executive for the Department of Justice will likewise be present.

A special section of the conference will be devoted to the Press and will be headed by leading newspaper publishers and editors of the Southwest.

The fairest, sweetest flowers that grow.
Kiss her and leave her, your heart's delight,
On dreamless sleep, Ora will sleep tonight.

A shadowy gleam of life-light lies
Around the lids of her slumberless eyes,
And her lips are closed in fond delay
Of the loving words she had to say;
And her gentle heart forgot to beat,
And from tender hands to silent feet
She is strangely quiet, cold and white—
The fever is gone. Ora will sleep tonight!

Put by her work and her empty chair,
Fold up the garments she used to wear,
Draw down the curtains and close the door;
For the task assigned her under the sun,
Is finished now and the guerdon won
Tenderly kiss her feet, put out the light—
And leave her alone, Ora sleeps tonight.

Oh, blessed sleep! That will not break,
For tears, nor prayers, or loves, sweet sake;
Oh, perfect rest! That knows no pain,

FEARS OF BIG BUSINESS RIDICULED BY KENNEDY

Business men who are credited with having expressed fear of the Roosevelt administration "either don't know what they say or don't know what they mean," said Joseph P. Kennedy, former chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission in an interview at Hyannisport, Mass., copyright by the North American Newspaper Alliance.

"It is important to have continuity of administration," he said "until these new measures have a chance to get established. It is high time we had cooperation to make out system work. I am afraid some people are laying up trouble for themselves the way they are acting. The time when they could sit tight and write their own ticket is gone. You can't tell the public to go to hell any more. Fifty men have run America, and that's a high figure. Now the rest of America is demanding a share in the game and they will get it.

"Here is a government struggling up from the chaos of only three years ago, still with ten million unemployed, and without the cooperation of business leadership. Unemployment is a problem we are going to have for a long time. I don't see how anybody giving any thought to the trends all over the world can help but feel there is something in the air in the advancement of a new social order. If not, they are just denying to themselves what to me is very obvious. That is why I think it is of the greatest importance to reelect Mr. Roosevelt. We must put him back there with his experience.

"The best answer to the talk about inflation is to take the portfolios of the big banks, all of them anti administration. They've bought increased amounts of government securities every quarter. With their bitter feelings about the New Deal, they would n't load up with its paper if they really believed it was going to destroy them. It shows they don't mean what they say or don't know what they mean."

Elvis Holly and Clifton Kimbrough left Friday for Odessa where they will be employed in the Robert Lea Drug Store. They made the trip with Mr. Lea who had been here visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Lea.
