LOT CLEARED—Workmen had just begun demolition work on the old filling station structure on the corner of West Dale and North Church streets when the first picture was taken last week. A day or two later, the building had been reduced to a pile of rubble, and a loader was used to load the debris onto dump trucks, and completely clear the lot. This is just one of the several old buildings which, having served their purpose through many years, have been torn down in an effort to make the community more attractive. This building was originally a filling station, and then several years ago was converted into a car wash, and then abandoned. (Staff photos by Kelley Thomas)

No Increase In Water Rates At This Time

There will be no increase in water rates for Winters customers—at this time—as had been anticipated some weeks ago by the Winters City Council.

In a called meeting last Friday evening, the council voted to continue with the regular rates, in view of the "almost total cooperation" on the part of residents in conserving water during this hot, dry summer.

Several weeks ago, the council had asked the public to cooperate in conserving water, brought on by the dwindling supply in the Winters City Lake. Residents were asked to voluntarily ration water, to stop watering lawns and gardens, and to use water only when necessary. The council at that time said if voluntary action was not taken, then some type of increase in the rates charged for water would be made, to force conservation.

Water Superintendent Jim Hamner, and Earl Roach, alderman in charge of the Water Department, told the council that most everyone is cooperating during this almost-emergency period. There are a "few," it was stated, who are continuing to water lawns with city water, but "criticism by neighbors" would serve as a deterrent in those isolated instances, it was indicated. Many people are using water from wells on their own property to keep their lawns and gardens alive, and some are hauling water in from outside the community.

Many methods have been suggested in the conservation of water. Some people are saving bath water, and water from washing machines, and using that to keep their gardens and lawns watered, it was said. Also, few people are washing their cars in their driveways. One novel way to conserve water, it was suggested, is to put a brick in the water tank of the bathroom commode. Although the water displaced by one brick will be slight, it was said, when multiplied by the number of commodes in the community, water consumption would be reduced considerably.

Meanwhile, the city is attempting to find additional sources of water to go through this period of dwindling supply. Several wells have been drilled, but only three have shown promise.

councilmen said. Three wells on the Van Whittenberg farm southeast of Winters show some promise, and production tests will be made—probably this week—to determine if the wells will produce enough to justify buying pumps and laying water lines to the intake tower at the lake. Cost of such a project would run into several thousand dollars, it was said, and the council wants to be reasonably sure that available water supplies from the wells would be enough. It was believed that production from these wells would be about 300 gallons a minute, as indicated by preliminary test pumpings.

The council expressed satisfaction with the cooperation the public has extended during this period of water shortage, and thanked residents for their cooperation and understanding.

FB Queen Contest and Talent Find Saturday

ANA ARTECONA

The Runnels County Farm Bureau queen contest and talent find will be held at the FB meeting room in Balingier at 3 p. m., Sunday, July 9.

The reigning queen, Karen Redman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Redman, will turn over her crown to one of three contestants: Ana Artecona, Kathryn Bredemeyer and Laurie Pruser.

Contestants in the talent find event will be Kathryn Bredemeyer, Pam Holle, and Laurie Pruser.

Ed Cumbie, FB field man from Bronte, will be master of ceremonies for the show. Judges will be Carl Weaver, and Mr. and Mrs. Billy Vinson.

Members of the Farm Bureau, as well as the general public, are welcome to attend the contests Sunday, Edward Bredemeyer, president of the Runnels County Farm Bureau, said.

KATHRYN BREDEMEYER

Gospel Meeting At Old Norton Church of Christ

George Gray of Fort Worth will be the speaker during a summer gospel meeting at the Old Norton Church of Christ, beginning July 9 and continuing through July 16.

Leon Bahlman of San Angelo will direct singing during the meeting.

Services will be at 10 a. m. and 6:30 p. m. on Sunday, and at 8 p. m. week-days.

The public is invited to attend these services.

Class of '58 Reunion Had Good Turnout

About 30 members of the Winters High School Class of '58 turned out for the 20th anniversary reunion held here Saturday.

No formal program had been planned, because of the lack of meeting facilities, but members of the class—from over a wide area—got together on the high school lawn Saturday afternoon, and groups also planned parties for Saturday night.

There also were discussions about organizing for future meetings of the class.

Runnels Farmers Union Will Explore Alien Farm Investments

The growing concern over foreign investment in prime agricultural lands in Texas and possible legislation to monitor the problem will be the main focus when members of the Runnels County Farmers Union meet at the Winters Community Center Thursday, July 6.

Special guest speaker will be Jay Naman of Waco, president of Texas Farmers Union. The meeting will begin at 8 p. m. and will be chaired by Runnels County FU President Randall Conner.

A county task force headed by Robert Parramore of Winters has been formed to investigate possible alien ownership in Runnels County and, moreover, to serve as a unit in a statewide land ownership task force within TFU. Other members of the Runnels County committee are Roscoe Morrison of Winters, Dwaine Lange of Norton and Billy R. Russell of Winters, who will serve along with Parramore and Conner.

According to government accounts, the sale of U. S. farmland to foreign interests last year amounted to over $1 billion. Some spokesmen in the private real estate sector say that the official figure is too low and that foreign investment is at least double that due to subverted records and investments by corporations composed of one or several alien stockholders.

Legislation at both the state and national level is currently aimed at setting up procedures for registration and monitoring of foreign purchases. The Texas Farmers Union committee will attempt to bring farmers to testify in regard to known and suspected foreign speculation to demonstrate a need for the monitoring system.

Although the problem does not appear to be acute in Runnels County, Parramore says that his local efforts for LOT "are certainly worthwhile considering the implications for the future of American farm operations and the affordability of farmland by young farmers."

The Thursday night meeting is open to the public. An ice cream supper provides an attraction for the whole family and everyone is encouraged to bring ice cream, cookies or cake.

The Runnels County Farmers Union is currently in the midst of rebuilding of the organization which was begun here several years ago. To continue those efforts the active membership will be canvassing for new members all day Friday following the meeting.

and more making the 30 to 40 miles a day with the greatest difficulty. Sometimes the cavalry would reach camp late in the evening and the wagons would not get up till 10 or 12 o'clock and then the men would have to unpack and cook their suppers by fires made of wood dug out of the ice and snow. Sometimes we would camp miles from the horses and for the sake of the wood as wet as it was by the side of a low wooded ravine bottom and Robert all day attending to his sick after we got into camp would have to take his ax and clear away (nick undergrowth and then shovel away the snow to get at the damp ground to spread our blankets. Then make a big fire at our feet and all lay down and sleep soundly till morning. When by daylight we would be off again. Pneumonia was on the increase and poor Robert had his hands full. There was no rest for him, how he kept up is more than I can tell.

hubs and then you are no sooner up on hill than you have to go down another. Moving off the 2nd of January away up in the extreme north of the great state of Texas almost on the banks of the Red River and when it is so near the head of the river that you never think that the little stream that is now ice bound, covered with snow, and can easily be stepped across, pursues its course slowly, gradually winding until it forms the famous river on whose bosom the gun boats were now floating in a clime where snow and ice are unknown.

The camp was broken up, the wagons cleaned off, vast heaps of snow, the half frozen teamsters groped in the snow and ice for stiffened harness. The poor mules were brought from the river bottoms where they had been sent to get shelter in the heavy timber, the only protection they had from the bitter north easter. The frozen collars were fitted to their necks and harness put on. The men hurried and throwing their things in the wagons, moving their horses.

In less than an hour, the regiment were in columns. The word march to start on the forced march over roads almost impossible in every season but particularly in winter. To go I hoped quickly as possible from the region of ice to the warm midst of a sleet rain that soon covered horse and rider with a heavy coat of icy mail.

We bid farewell to our camp fires where the giants of the forest had fallen victims to the shap axe of the half frozen soldiers and the fire that consumed them helped us to bear the bitter cold. In the rear of the long column, horses followed our ambulance. Four mules could scarce pull it through the snow altho we had put off all our baggage in the wagons to make the carriage as light as possible. We had our blankets and the children had good warm flannels but no shoes. They had none all winter. I spun and knit them warm stockings which kept off frosted feet. So wrapped them up in blankets and myself the same. We jogged on at a snail's pace the whole day long, sometimes waiting an hour at some ugly cricks whose steep banks and bad croppings made it necessary for the men to dismount and put their shoulders to the wheel and sometimes to build bridges or cut away banks in order to cross with the wagons. Night at length came. Robert as it approached rode on ahead of the command to seek among the farm houses a shelter for us and the sick of the regiment.

But from house to house he was refused, finally becoming disappointed at the heartlessness of the wretches for whose sake his men were now suffering and we had left our comfortable home, he demanded as a right what they refused as courtesy that his sick should have shelter and the men demanded the same for us and willing hearts of some of the tired soldiers lifted us out half frozen and sit us down in a comfortable room before a good fire.

The woman of the house who at first received us very ungraciously softened at the sight of our little rosy cheeked children as we unwrapped them from their blankets and soon had a good supper prepared for us. It was the first table we had sit around for a long time and we did ample justice to what was set before us. She then gave us a good bed and a comfortable room and we took off our clothes for the first time for a month only to change them. Morning came to soon for us. The bed felt so good to us we hated to leave it, but the regiment was in motion and our ambulance was at the door. So after a good breakfast with sassafras tea, we bundled up our little ones and started out in the cold. The rain had ceased during the night but the cold had increased, if possible. But we were so glad to have the rain stop that we did not mind the cold half as much as we did the day before.

Our lodging that night altho a forced one cost us 8 dollars. Tramp, tramp went the horses' feet all that weary day. Strong men unable to bear the cold would in spite of the officers break from the ranks and ride off to some house to warm themselves then gallop back to the command but there was no stop for us, for had our ambulance been detained but half an hour, we would not be able to get up with the regiment again.

That night, the second out, we got to a house where 15 men spread down their blankets in the same room where I slept. Think of that you modest dames! I had a bed for myself and children and Robert spread his blanket by the side of us on the floor. That night chickens froze on their roosts and men were found frozen on the roadside.

The roads were getting better but the animals were giving out as the farmers refused to let us have anything except corn in such small quantities that they were half starved. The stay at homes had got tired of paying tithes and taxes and were weary of the burden of war and turned a deaf ear to the plaint of our misery. They said let them take our negroes and stop the war. That thanks be to Providence, they have taxes now and negroes to help them make it. So passed day by day. The farmers getting more churlish because they thought the Yankees were not coming just yet. The weather appeared to grow more cold if possible.

You will think we made a great fuss about the cold but you don't know what a winter in northern Texas is, besides we had been living in the land of grapes and oranges. The men and animals were giving out more

Cong. Krueger Favors Addition Of Rio Grande Area To Scenic System

U. S. Cong. Bob Krueger last week announced his decision to vote in favor of the addition of a 191-mile segment of the Rio Grande River to the Wild and Scenic River system, and to oppose designation of the Big Bend National Park as Wilderness. The House of Representatives is currently debating, and was expected to vote this week, on both designation provisions, as part of H. R. 12536, the Omnibus National Parks and Recreation Bill.

"My position has always been that I would favor leaving complete control of the land in private hands so long as those owners made no move toward substantial development, but that if ownership changed and development seemed likely, my support would necessarily go toward governmental protection of the river, and inclusion in the Wild and Scenic River system," Krueger said.

"Upon reexamination of the situation along the Rio Grande . . . I found that conditions were substantially altered since my 1974 decision to oppose the Wild and Scenic designation," Krueger said in a prepared statement during a Washington press conference. "An analysis of current information convinces me the 191.2-mile segment of the Rio Grande should now be added to the Wild and Scenic River System.

Krueger said a tour of the area on May 15 by two of his aides, recent deed changes transferring land to absentee landowners, and a yet unpublished scientific study of the area were factors in his decision not to oppose designation of the Rio Grande Segment. Review and reexamination of Big Bend National Park showed no current development or imminent danger of development which justifies designation of 583,000 acres as wilderness, Krueger said.

Krueger said he opposed the designation of the Rio Grande when he first came to Congress in 1974 after inspecting the area at that time. Krueger said he realized then the importance of maintaining the area in a relatively wild and undeveloped state and believed the best way to achieve that was to, "leave the land in control of families who had a history of landownership . . . who had developed a deep attachment to the natural state of the land and could be counted upon to maintain the unspoiled nature of the river

... "A glance at recent deeds affecting land along the Rio Grande in Brewster and Terrell counties demonstrates the increasing tendency toward land development activities harmful to the natural " (of the Rio Grande segment), Krueger said.

The $2 million development on the river at Lajitas, above Big Bend National Park, was a particular example cited by Krueger as a precedent which could possibly be repeated along the segment of the Rio Grande below the Park unless federally protected.

Krueger also cited a scientific study conducted by botanists, zoologists, archaeologists, geologists and historians which has not yet been published, but which proves conclusively the archaeological and natural value of the land which had previously only been speculated upon.

Krueger said the criteria for his decision to vote for the designation are the same as when he formulated his original position to oppose designation of the stretch of the Rio Grande as Wild and Scenic, but that circumstances have changed, and his position will now reflect the changes.

"... Forty years ago, residents of the Big Bend area arranged to have . . . established Big Bend as the first National park in Texas . . . A single action has protected Big Bend for more than thirty years . . . I would hope that generations of Texans to come will approve our decision to preserve the Rio Grande, just as we today thank those who made possible the establishment and preservation of Big Bend National Park," Krueger said.

There are 100 billion stars in our galaxy, but from the earth only about 6,000 can be seen by the naked eye.
