There will be a short organizational meeting in the auditorium. Parents will then follow their son's or daughter's schedule. Each class period will last 10 minutes with a short passing period in between.

OIIL IBIIDNIESS By Reg Boles e1994

We continue our discussion of the Iraq oil embargo this week, and we are going to try to bracket the potential impact (on oil markets) of lifting the restrictions.

To recap: There are two dates that are important milestones in Iraq's road to escaping the postwar sanctions imposed upon it in 1991. September 1994 is a date on which the installed cameras monitoring Iraqi military installations become operational. The second date is March 1995, which is six months after the camera operations begin. This is being pointed to as a date on which sanctions could be lifted.

That doesn't mean that the sanctions will be lifted by then, as there are good reasons to extend that time. It is most probable that sanctions will not be lifted before the end of 1995 (a date being discussed by France, Russia, and Turkey). But, the urgency of the situation should signal all of those interested in the price of oil to be on guard for what may follow the eventual lifting of the sanctions.

In the short term, oil prices will move on rumors. There will be movements in September based on what the U.N. actually does, since market watchers expect some announcement regarding the monitoring camers. Depending on how that first date passes, there will be movement in prices six months later, as there will be some speculators that will fear a lifting of sanctions as early as that date.

As the time approaches for lifting sanctions (signaled by positive announcements by the U.N. regarding Iraq's situation), OPEC producers with excess capacity will be tempted to ramp-up production. This will give them more power from which to bargain for quotas when Iraq is allowed back in the fold. This will cause some reduction in prices due just to the additional oil on the market, which

I hope I'm wrong, but I am afraid we are all in for a roller coaster ride on prices in the next 18 months, with a real "stomach grabber" drop somewhere in the mix. The good news is that it doesn't look like it will be 1986 all over again.

of why in the past two major renovations of school buildings that the basic structures (elementary building and secondary school building) had been kept but in the instance of the cafeteria, the plans are to tear it down and build a new structure. Bahlman asked why this building was "good enough' twice, but not the third time.

Pinkerton stated that in the instance of the cafeteria, the board's feeling is that it would cost more to renovate than to tear down and build a new one.

The architect present at the meeting was asked if he had looked at the cafeteria and he stated that he had not.

Bill Wayne Walker, Gary Jacob, and Randall Conner were also at the meeting.

The meeting was adjourned with all board members being present.

Social Security is 59 and still working

59th birthday August 14th. While many people take the program for granted and others question whether it's going to be around in the future, here are some facts that are worth thinking about on this occasion. These are just a few examples of the stories that don't make headlines — the business as usual items for the Social Security Administration and the millions of customers we serve.

 Currently, the Social Security Administration (SSA) serves 42 million Social Security beneficiaries, 5 million individuals who receive Supplemental Security Income (SSI) benefits, and 135 million workers who are paying into the system.

 Out of each dollar you pay one penny goes to pay for the administrative expenses necessary to run the largest social insurance system in the world.

 Every month, 99.8 percent of SSA's beneficiaries receive their checks in the right amount, at the right address, and on time. And, this service has been ongothrough an era that has witnessed the nation at war, in recession, at peace, and in prosperous times.  The largest single SSA workload is processing requests for new and replacement Social Security cards. Every working day, about 70,000 applications are taken and for 94 percent of them a response is in the mail to the customer in less than 5 days - with a 99.7 percent accuracy rate.  The primary purpose of the Social Security number is to help

Social Security celebrated its track the earnings of workers who pay Social Security taxes. Social Security benefits are based on earnings reports submitted by employers and credited to the worker's Social Security number. Every year, more than 220 million earnings reports are received from thousands of employers across the country: 99.6 percent of those earnings are accurately posted to SSA's records.

 Every year, more than 3 million new claims for monthly benefits are filed by retirees and their dependents and by widows, widowers, and children of workers who have died. These claims are processed and the first check is ready to mail in about 14 days - with a 99.8 percent accuracy rate.

 Each year, 230,000 claims for Supplemental Security Income (SSI) benefits are received from people age 65 or older. Their first payment is ready in about 17 days, with a 96 percent record of accuracy.

 Every year, SSA receives more than 60 million reports of changes of address, marriage, diing for more than a half-century, vorce, death, and other events that affect a person's eligibility for Social Security benefits. Social Security representatives with "online" access to beneficiary files record the new information and update the files instantaneously. Hopefully, these facts will help you feel better the next time you see a headline criticizing some aspect of Social Security. They should help you recognize that such criticism is not the whole story.

will be exacerbated by speculation about when the quotas actually will be lifted.

Most likely, this will cause prices to have a downward bias on any bad news. In other words, any bearish news for oil prices between September 1994 and the end of 1995 may cause big daily or weekly drops in price ($1-$2 per barrel).

As the time grows nearer for the actual lifting of sanctions, the pressure will grow for a significant downward move on prices ($3-$6 per barrel) over some period of time. This move will be cushioned somewhat by the drop in production in the former Soviet Union, Alaska, and the North Sea, but, at least initially, the drop may be big immediately after the embargo is removed.

All of this assumes there will be no other blips on the supply side of the equation (war, major loss of production somewhere, etc.).

Recovery will take some time, but it probably won't take more than a year for the world's demand for oil to soak up the extra production (after the effects of drops in production in the West are considered).

The trouble is, "the hurrier I go the behinder I get". I don't know who said that, but for sure it is true in my life. Carl G. Jung, a world famous psychiatrist who is no longer living, once said, "Hurry is not of the devil, it is the devil." It seems like I am always behind, have more to do than the time to do it, and, am often late. A good friend of mine, a Roman Catholic bishop, used to introduce me as "the late Reverend Hanson".

God isn't in a hurry. He takes His time - even in creation. The other day I found a poem. Written by Baxter Black. You can find it in his And after a hard day on her book "Croutons on a Cowpie, Volume II". Texas urged to pledge safety belt usage hicle Choice is urging all Texans to help prevent needless deaths and injuries by pledging to use safety belts on every trip.

The statistics on safety belts have been in for some time, and the message is clear: Safety belts are our most effective weapon in the fight to minimize the risk of death or serious injury in automobile crashes," said M.J. Nicchio, state coordinator for the Coalition for Vehicle Choice. "Properly used, safety belts cut your chances of fatal injury by 40 to 50 percent, and reduce the risk of serious injury by 45 to 55 percent."

According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA), safety belts saved 5,301 lives in 1993 and more than 40,000 lives since 1983.

The Texas Coalition for Ve- In 1992 alone, NHTSA reports, safety belts saved Americans almost $11 billion by preventing highway deaths and injuries.

Despite the convincing evidence for safety belt use, many Americans still have not made safety belts a part of their routine. According to Mr. Nicchio, "The government estimates that today about 66 percent of Americans regularly use safety belts. While this is an enormous improvement over the 11 percent who buckled up regularly in 1982, it still leaves one-third of the nation's motorists unnecessarily at risk."

Many of these motorists are "part-time" belt users, buckling up usually only on longer trips, in bad weather or on the highway. The Coalition for Vehicle Choice joins NHTSA in its call for "parttime" belt users to use safety belts on every trip. "Many fatal crashes occur close to home, at moderate speeds and on roads familiar to the driver," said Mr. Nicchio. "It's important that we make drivers aware that safety belts are essential at all times." CVC emphasizes that it is especially important to buckle up in small cars because research shows these occupants have twice the fatality risk of occupants of large cars.

CVC also reminds Americans that motorists are required to use safety belts in 46 states. "Using your safety belt is using your head. It can save you the hassle and expense of a ticket, and, more importantly, it can save your life. Make safety belts a part of your driving routine, and encourage your passengers to buckle up as well.'

True Beginnings

What one learns as a boy is will someday be.

The Old Man had motioned quietly ahead as they ambled down a hedgerow of cactus and stone.

His nod told the boy that Della and Blue were on scent and would soon pin the covey among the cobblestones and brambles of a fence-line long since fallen.

The dogs had loped ahead, melting away for a moment only to splay like brown and black ghosts through openings in the bluethorn. How the boy would come to cherish these items, with the sun warm across their backs and the promise of another covey on the rise.

Blue had come on point and Della honored close behind. The Old Man fanned wide to the left and nodded that it was time to step in for the tingling, five-second flurry that came with the flush.

There was not often the need for spoken words. The quiet beauty of fresh fallen snow or the sun-dappled winter day with hunting dogs on birds always said what words could never fully say.

And when the day was almost done, they would often walk side by side, watching the dogs for the day's last point. Tired to the bone from a hard day's hunt, yet disappointed that it was coming to an end.

Like times before, it was a good tired, the kind of tired that comes from capturing all the wonders between pink and purple sunrises and sunsets of flaming gold.

"The world's turnin' a lot faster than it used to, son," the Old Man had said, shifting the Browning from one shoulder to the other. "Seems like it gets to turnin' faster

The dogs came to point under a often the measure of what the man tangle of lotebush. "Whoa," the Old Man called softly. At the rise, the boy had shot once and the Old Man's side-by-side had spoken

"Nice shot," the boy had said. "I've never said it before, son, but I've come to appreciate good manners in a man. I've hunted with some who woulda' put that bird in their bag without a word. Or shot across at the birds on my side. You did neither. Good manners serve a man well in the woods.

same as they do out of it." The Old Man had opened the breech of his shotgun and looked down both barrels. "That's my limit, how about you?"

They had walked on down the winding road, stopping once to stand in awe beneath the spreading canopy of a centuries old oak.

After awhile, the Old Man had said in stride, "Did ya notice how Dellahonoredole' Blue back there. Wouldn't it be a fine world if people was more like that, respectful of one another and the talents they was born with to this earth.'

The Old Man had fished out a couple of candy bars from his hunting coat and handed one to the boy. He crumpled the wrapper and dropped it, not to the ground, but back into the pocket of his

The Old Man had pulled ten birds from his bag. The boy remembered that one had been lost and another had dropped a leg but not gone down.

Though nothing was said and no one would have ever known. the Old Man had counted both lost birds against his limit of twelve.

As they sat, and walked, and watched, he would often talk of the little things, like why a baby fawn is covered in spots or what makes a mockingbird sing long into the night.

And there were the sometimes forgotten things - like respect, and principle and honor - things learned as a boy that make the measure of what the man will someday be.

That day, in a pace never hurried, they had stopped on an open hillside, to rest, to look, and to listen. They had studied the groves of coral-red sumac, with it's beautiful and delicate leaves of flame and watched as a red-tailed hawk soared high on wings of grace.

'God Almighty did a fittin' job, didn't he?" The Old Man had said after awhile. "The Lord blessed me with some fine gifts, son. A woman who loved me in spite of myself, a few good ole' dogs, the pleasure of your company and the time to behold sights such as those before us now."

"The world surely needs a lot of admirin," he had said gently, as the sun sank crimson-red against a backdrop of fire-orange and powder-blue. The quiet hush of dusk had fallen, with a sense of peace that can be felt but not described.

"More'n me and you can do in one day. What say we try it again tomorrow, just you and me. I know ing of livestock occurs when Johnson grass, sudan, sorghumsudan hybrids or grain sorghums are grazed immediately after a killing frost. However, prussic acid may also accumulate to toxic levels when rains cause new growth in drought-stressed plants. It develops only when the normal growth of plants has been retarded or stopped by drought, wilting, trampling, bruising or following a frost. Highest prussic acid content generally occurs within a week after rain stimulates new growth of retarded plants. Often the only indication of prussic acid poisoning is dead animals. It is one of the most potent, rapidly acting poisons known. When a lethal dose is consumed, an animal can die in a few minutes. A characteristic sign of prussic acid poisoning is a bright cherry-red color of the blood that persists several hours after death. Livestock should be kept off new growth for two to three weeks following rains. They should be turned into a field when they are full, rather than hungry. A field test is available for prussic acid. It will show prussic acid if it is present in a sample, but it would not be proper to assume a whole field is safe to graze if prussic acid does not show up in the test.

Winters Livestock Show Association elects new officers

On August 31, the Winters Livestock Show Association had their first meeting of the 1994-95 year.

New officers were elected. Johnny Pritchard will serve as president; Glenn Hoppe Jr., vicepresident; Bob Webb, secretarytreasurer and Denny Heathcott, reporter.

Generally, prussic acid poison- soning and, to a lesser extent, pruissic acid poisoning, can be prevented or minimized by feeding cattle safe hay before allowing them access to potentially dangerous fields. The supplemental feeding of cubes or other energy sources will help facilitate the conversion of nitrate to readily utilizable nontoxic compounds, and thereby avoid a building-up of toxic levels of nitrate.

Prussic acid poisoning is unusual in baled forages, as prussic acid is usually released during the curing process prior to baling. On the other hand, the nitrate content of a forage for all practical purposes remains the same even after curing. Cloudy weather, high soil nitrogen (fertilization), and environmental conditions that severely retard growth rate can result in unusually high nitrate content in forages. The state of maturity will also affect the nitrate level of some forages. It is therefore advisable to check nitrate levels prior to cutting forages that can contain potentially lethal nitrate levels. Delaying a cutting could significantly reduce nitrate levels in some instances, and therefore help to avoid death losses in the cattle consuming these forages at a later date.

Pest Management News by Richard Minzenmayer Extension Agent Entomology (PM) Runnels-Tom Green Counties

GENERAL SITUATION

We are in the "short rows" concerning insect control for this year. Most of the cotton fields are cutout and maturing quite rapidly. The only exceptions may be fields which had to be replanted or fields that sustained significant insect damage to delay maturity.

Cotton is considered cut-out when the plants terminal growth stops. At this point the field attractiveness for bollworm egg deposition diminishes, since moths prefer lush, actively growing plants. Newly hatched larvae use this lush growth for a food source when they first hatch. Without this young succulent growth and immature squares, bollworms can't survive well.

Weevils are certainly causing problems right now in all fields which still have squares and small immature bolls.

We need a bloom by the 1st of September in most years to be assured of providing a mature harvestable boll. That means that producers should monitor their irrigated field for another 12-15 days then let them have the rest. Once bolls are 12-15 days old they are not as susceptible to weevil damage.

Winters Police Beat

The information below is taken from reports on file with the Winters Police Department. Some of the information is provided to police by citizens, and in some cases, police have not finished investigating the reports. These reports make up a small percentage of the total calls the Department receives and responds to each week. Winters Police Department reports received and/or investigated from Sunday, August 28, through Saturday, September 3, 1994. Winters Police Officers: • investigated a criminal mischief and criminal trespass in the 700 block of Majestic in which an individual caused damage to the door of the residence and then entered the residence without permission. There was no one home at the time of the offense. After the police investigation, the complainant refused to file charges on the suspect.

· while officers where looking for a specific suspect, as mentioned in the above paragraph, officers personally observed a residence in the 500 block of N. Main which appeared to have been vandalized. Upon further inspection, no occupants were found at the residence, but while at the residence, an individual threw a rock at one of the police cars parked in front of the residence, causing damage to the patrol car. There was one occupant in the vehicle at the time of the criminal mischief. There is a suspect in the case and charges are expected to be filed this week. The vandalism at the residence was later found to have been done by a resident and was not criminal mischief.
