City council holds line on budget

In a four-hour budget workshop Monday evening, the city council and city administrator cut, whittled, and trimmed the 1996-97 budget.

Under the council's instruction, city administrator Aref Hassan presented a budget with no increase in city taxes, water rates, or sewer rates.

From the time the budget was put together until the time it was presented, a certified tax roll was received from the Runnels County Central Appraisal District. This equals $6,463 of lost tax revenue for the city of Winters. Gene Stewart, chief appraiser of the Appraisal District, explained that the reason for this $1 million decrease is mainly due to depreciation of value of industrial machinery and equipment.

After the explanation by Mr. Stewart, the council went item by item through the budget and did

International Clown Week Begins, Senior Citizens Nursing Home

I promised a couple of weeks ago to review the terms in an oil and gas lease from a property owner's perspective.

First of all, a lease is an agreement between a mineral owner and another party. The "other party" can be anyone interested in getting the rights to the minerals under your property-not necessarily an oil company. A mineral owner is the person or entity that owns the rights to the minerals below the top soil, in most cases.

The other party usually agrees to pay the mineral owner a bonus payment. This bonus is usually denominated in dollars per acre and is a sum of money up front to compensate the mineral owner for Welcome to new the use of his mineral rights.

The lease is just that—it is not a sale of the rights, only a rental of the rights with some expiration clause. That expiration falls under one of two basic categories: primary term or secondary term.

The primary term is the originally-agreed-to length of time that oil and gas drilling can occur on the lease. At the end of that term, the lease expires. This can be 1 to 10 years, with 3 years being a very popular primary term.

The term of a lease can be extended by establishing production, and this is the beginning of the secondary term. The secondary term ends when the other party stops producing from the property.

While the property is producing, the mineral owner is entitled to a royalty payment.

Royalty is the payment that the lessee (the "other party" mentioned above) pays the lessor (the mineral owner) as a percentage of every barrel or cubic foot of petroleum produced from the leased area. The common royalty is oneeighth (or 12.5 percent), but it can be any agreed percentage in the lease document.

certain amount per acre or a lump sum that the lessee agrees to pay until production is established or the lease expires.

I am not qualified to be an expert in mineral leases, so if you have specific and particular questions to be answered about a lease, please contact an expert. However, I would always welcome your comments and general questions directed to this newspaper.

of of rs,

The other day I read a poem. I found it in a paper called "Fifty Something News." The poet, Ruth Ozarich of Bakersfield, California, tells us that she turned to poetry when her eyes got too dim and she had to give up on her craft work. The title of her poem is "Old Love." It was dedicated to an older couple, but, according to Ozarich, it brought to mind how she and her husband felt after 65 years of marriage.

OLD LOVE

"Some think love is for the young And fool's illusion time, But I think love is for the old, For you I'll sing my rhyme!

Hot young love is passion's tool, Gluts itself, and asks for more, Often discontent, feels fortune's fool, Walks out and slams the door!

Old love grows along with time, Builds its own illusion, Satisfies itself, in satisfying, Finds love's own conclusion.

Yes, I'll sing for you, old love, And happy years we've known, Reaping harvests of the lasting love That we have sown."

I love that poem. It really tells it like it is. Oh, not every couple that has stuck it out feels exactly that way. I am reminded of a man whose wife I buried 43 years ago. His name was Baldwin Gottenburg and he lived up north in Harve, Montana. I was a young parish intern, and my senior pastor had left me in charge for a month while he went on vacation. My biggest fear was that someone would die, and I would have the funeral. It wasn't the funeral service that bothered me - it was the one on one consolation and counsel that I was to bring to the bereaved.

Well, it happened. Baldwin's wife died, and I went over to visit him. Several times a week — before and after the funeral. I would come over, loaded with Bible passages and comfort words in my head. I talked a lot, and didn't stay long enough to do much listening. One day, after I had been comforting Baldwin, or so I thought, he said to me, "Jim, I really like you. You have come here often, and I appreciate your concern. But, I have to tell you something, I'm glad the old girl died."

I couldn't believe my ears. He went on to say, "I never could understand her. She never went to church. But every day, she would get out her devotional book, take a cup of coffee, light up a cigarette, and read. How could she do that? Read that prayer book and smoke at the same time? It made me mad."

Shayla Marie Roddey arrived at St. Joseph's Hospital in College Station at 1:28 p.m. on Friday, July 19, 1996. Shayla weighed 8 pounds, 4 ounces and was 19-3/4 inches long.

I listened. Didn't say much. Didn't get over there for about six weeks. When I did, it was about 9 o'clock in the morning.

Baldwin answered the door. We went to the kitchen table. There was a cup of coffee, the devotional book, and an ash tray. Baldwin was doing just what his wife had done for years. "I guess it was okay, Jim. At least I'm doing it now, and it gives me comfort. She really was a good old gal."

Well, sometimes we discover too late the mystery of staying together and reaping the harvest of that staying together. For that reason, every day, I try to celebrate our forty-two years together with some kind of "thank you," and deep appreciation for the happy years we've known. To Ramona, of course. For, I am a satisfied one. And fully convinced that love is for the old. For keeps, "Til death us do part". And - beyond. Praise God for old love!

Estate Planning Seminar

Ranchers who wish to learn with the Texas Agricultural Exmore about planning their estates may take part in the seminar scheduled prior to Texas A&M University's Beef Cattle Short Course.

The Ranch Estate Planning Seminar is Aug. 11-12 in Room 453 of the Blocker Building on the Texas A&M campus.

"Ranchers have uniquely distinct estate tax and estate planning problems," said Dr. Wayne Hayenga, agricultural economist tension Service and seminar instructor. Since most of the assets are tied up in land, it may be difficult for heirs to pay federal estate taxes after a death, he explained. The estate planning seminar begins at 4 p.m. on Aug. 11 and ends at 4:30 p.m. Aug. 12. The beef cattle short course is scheduled for Aug. 12-14.

Estate planning is important to insure that property is distributed as the rancher desired and that his or her wishes in the will are carried out effectively, Hayenga said. The basic laws concerning estates haven't changed since 1982; however, court interpretations have. "There are always a few nooks and crannies that some people either can get caught with or can use for planning opportunities," he said.

Trusts will be one of the topics for discussion.

"A trust is a very useful thing if you have life insurance policies. The life insurance policy can go into a trust so that the proceeds are available to pay federal estate taxes if needed, but you don't have to pay the same taxes on the proceeds," he explained.

Additionally, ranches often are owned as partnerships by two or more people, and Hayenga will discuss how to structure those partnerships for maximum benefits.

Other topics will include property titles, gifts, special land use valuation, and deferred tax payment rules.

"We realize that this is a specialized topic that not everyone at the beef cattle short course will be interested in, but if we can be of service to an extra few folks, we'll be pleased to do so," Hayenga said.

The cost of the seminar is $60. and that includes all seminar materials, refreshments, and meals for both days. Public parking is available at the North Side Parking Garage on University Drive. Further information is available from county Extension agents or from Dr. Hayenga at (409) 845-2226.

Beef Short Course to enhance cattle producers' knowledge versity Beef Cattle Short Course -the state's most extensive seminar in beef cattle management ---will attempt to develop strategies for effective economic management practices.

"Nowhere in the nation is so much topnotch in-depth information provided to its producers as that included in the Texas Beef Cattle Short Course on the campus of Texas A&M University," said Extension beef cattle specialist Dr. Larry Boleman.

Boleman says this short course, scheduled for Aug. 12-14, is a must for today's cattle ranchers because of the hard times facing them.

"Times are tough, no doubt, but producers cannot afford to run away from the problems," Boleman said. "They need to confront the problems and get as much information as possible, make educated decisions, and then react accordingly to the market and their financial status, as well as the environment."

This year's beef short course will address issues facing ranchers during the drought of 1996 and the multiple adversities that have come together in one disas- cows in terms of carrying capactrous ranching year.

prices, high corn prices and droughts — but never have we seen all of these things come together at once."

Ranchers will have the choice of attending many diverse workshops and seminars. Animal breeding and genetics relative to the drought will be discussed as well as topics such as forages, health, range management, reproduction, and nutrition.

Breeding and genetics play an important part in the management processes of forages and nutrition. Boleman says discussions about cow type and breed composition may help ranchers determine the amount and type of feed needed to sustain animals. "We are having a change in our cow type, particularly in the amount of muscle they have, the amount of condition they carry and maybe the breed composition," Boleman said.

Additionally, he said, modern cattle have gotten too large and have caused the carrying capacity of ranges as well as reproductivity to substantially decrease.

"We couldn't carry as many ity on the same amount of land as we were once able to, and it looked
