Fall Fabric Trends to Plaid

It's plaid-mad tartan and matras world for fall, adding new dimensions, built in interest and excitement to the season's fashions.

Plaids with their special fabric design present a challenge to the home sewer, but produce results well worth the extra effort.

For best results with plaid fabric, select a pattern with a minimum of seams. Also, check the pattern envelope to see if the garment is appropriate for plaids. If the envelope states "unsuitable for plaids," this means that the seams can't be matched due to the garment design. As a rule, if the garment is illustrated in a plaid on the envelope, the pattern designer feels it is particularly suited for plaids.

When buying plaid fabric, choose one in scale with the size of the person to wear it. Also, don't try to buy plaid from a small sample or swatch — the illusion created by several repeats of one pattern may be much stronger than the single design.

When buying a printed plaid, check that the lines of the plaid follow the grainlines of the fabric. Do not buy a plaid that is off-grain more than one inch per yard. If a print is slightly off-grain, lay out the pattern to match the plaids rather than the grain, because the plaid is the more noticeable.

Allow extra yardage to match plaids. Generally, the larger the plaid, the more widely spaces each repeat and the larger the pattern size and garment, the more yardage needed.

Arrange and cut pattern pieces so the plaids will match at major joining seamlines, not cutting lines. Do this by placing pattern notches of the plaid design. For example, a joining piece on the same area of notch at the top of a repeat should match its corresponding notch at the top of the same repeat.

If you are hesitant to try sewing a plaid fabric, begin by using a plaid for garment trim such as a collar, cuffs, pockets or yokes, or choose designs with few pattern changes.

Even plaid designs are also easier to sew and are arranged in the same design sequence crosswise and lengthwise. When folded through the center of any design, the lines of the top and bottom layers mirror each other. Uneven plaids vary in design either crosswise or lengthwise or both.
