PORTALES, ROOSEVELT COUNTY, NEW MEXICO, FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1918

Alamogordo-Newmen Road County Road Superintendent D. W. Jones has just returned from going over the proposed Alamagordo-Newmen road. There is sixty-nine miles of work, ten of which will be surfaced with gravel, the balance to be same meet at the court house in the construction as that between Portales and Elida, which has proved to be the only feasible way of handling sand, except where it can be surfaced with rock. Mr. Jones went over the entire line, locating camps, determining character of construction and making out requisitions for necesssry machinery. He will be in general charge of the line. Camps will be located, one at Escondido, under Foreman Emil F. Jones, one au Newman under Sid M. McNutt, and one at Alamagordo under Roy McDaniel. There will be about fifty state convicts employed in the construction who will be under the supervision of W. H. Ball. With the completion of this seventy miles of road the El Paso Short Line will be completed. Committee Meeting

On another page of this paper will be found the official call for a meeting of the county central committee. While this call does not specifically request the attendance of all candidates who will be before the primaries, yet it is the desire of the committee that all such attend. There will be business of importance to transact other than the setting of the day for the primary. It is supposed that the matter of assessment to meet expenses will be taken up and disposed of, as well as the rules under which the said primaries will be conducted. These are all matters of impor tance to candidates, as well as attendance is urged.

To the Public

There are constantly being circulated reports to the effect that the creamery here is going to shut down, or has shut down, followed by an effort to get the cream producers to withdraw their patronage; also to replace the home creamery stations by those of outside concerns. These reports are all false, have not the slightest foundation in fact, and are calculated only to get business from your home institution. If the time ever comes when I find it necessary to quit, I will be the first one to inform the public of that fact, in the meantime, I ask that all patrons of the home creamery give no credence to the false reports being circulated and to notify me if such continue. You are all aware of the fact that before the home creamery entered the field, you were getting much less than your product was worth, and you should be able to argue from past experience what to expect should the efforts to drive out competition be successful. I have and expect to continue paying every cent for cream that the market will permit. I have and shall continue to give your cream the exact test to which it is entitled. "Eight o'clock, Buddy-time for bed," remarked Mr. Holton.

"I don't want to go yet, Pa. Please can't I stay up till Jimmy is ready?"

"No, Buddy; Jimmy has his lessons to get and it may take him two hours." "Well, can't somebody come up in the hall with a light and wait till I get mother. "Huh! Should think I would!" muttered Buddy. "He can't get his snowhouse in the yard off'n his mind," piped Jimmy. "He's been going to the window to look out at it every two minutes."

Buddy's eyes expressed a queer glare, for just now he was distinctly edging away from the window. His spinster aunt, Miss Cordelia, spoke up in her kind, patient way:

"Perhaps Buddy is worrying for fear thaw will come and undo all his hard work on his Esquimaux hut."

"No, I ain't," dissented the lad mumblingly.

"Well, Buddy, I'll come and sit in the old lumber room next to yours and

"I wouldn't humor the boy that way, ff I were you, sister," said Buddy's

"Oh, boys have their nervous whims, just like us older ones," replied tolerant and indulgent Aunt Cordelia.

The good soul was right, and Buddy made a confidant of her as they went | bedroom. up the stairs.

"Aunt Cordelia, they'd all tease me but you, and laugh at me, but I saw a ghost out of the window in the yard." "Oh, Buddy!" rallied his aunt.

"Yes, sir, twict!" asserted Buddy in an awesome way. "Nonsense, Buddy! What particular shape did this wandering spirit of yours take?"

"He was an Esquimaux," asserted Buddy, solemnly. "He had a big bearskin robe all over him.

"Dear me!" fluttered Aunt Cordelia, with a little shiver. She had no belief? in ghosts, but Buddy's grewsomeness had begun to affect her. "It was probably some of your playmates dressed up in the old buffalo robe your father foaned you," she said. "Come, Buddy, pop into bed now," and she placed the camp at the head of the stairs so that it shed its rays into Buddy's room.

Then Miss Cordelia went down the hall and entered an old storeroom and went to the window and looked out at the snowhouse, and swept the garden space with her glance.

"What foolish notions children get," she murmured. "Oh, coming in here reminds me I must get another hank of yarn," added this indefatigable knitter. She fumbled around on the shelf where she supposed a certain box containing the yarn was located, and could not find it in the dark. Going fort compassing him. match as Buddy called out, in a tone muffled because he probably was hiding his head under the bedclothes:

"All right, Aunty-I'm in." As the last member of the family went upstairs to bed there crept out through the small semicircular door of the snowhouse a human figure. It was that of a man who was enveloped in the buffalo robe and resembled some rugged Laplander. He edged to the shelter of some trees and stood there motionless. His eyes were fixed on the window of the only one of the upper rooms which had a light in it, It was that of Aunt Cordelia. She came to the window in full view and pulled down the shade. The watcher uttered a deep sigh. Now he retreated towards the hut and sat down on a snow hummock.

"They have all gone to bed," he soliloquized. "It's safe for me to venture. She has left the window up from the bottom a few inches for ventilation, and the space is big enough to pass the letter through."

The man now removed the robe from his shoulders, thrust it out of view inside the snow hut and took from his pocket a sealed envelope. This ha placed between his teeth, approached the house and began a hand-over-hand, careful and noiseless ascent of a broad trellis which very nearly traversed the entire side of the house. Inch by inch he clambered, until his face was opposite the open window space. He freed one hand to remove the letter from his teeth and slipped it through the aper-

The stranger was about to descend when a sudden glow crossed his face. It died down, then suddenly it flared up more brilliantly than before. Curious, and at the same time somewhat startled, the man threw back his head to obtain a clearer range of vision. It was to discover a heap of rubbish in the storeroom which Aunt Cordelia had visited two hours previous bursting into a blaze.

"Fire! Fire! Fire!" he yelled at the top of his voice, intent on arousing the sleeping inmates of the house. Then he gave his body a forcible, forward lurch. It impelled him through the lower frame of the window with a heavy crash, carrying the splintered sash with him.

The man landed on the floor inside amid a shower of putty, glass and handling shovels and driving spikes wood. He was speedily on his feet. He kept up his shouting, but doubly active the while. Some smoking bits of carpet he lifted and flung through the window out upon the snow-covered

Now he wavered and uttered choking gasps. He felt that the smoke, cinders and heat were about to overcome him. He was about to abandon the unequal battle when he noticed two tinjacketed cans, the outside of which were smoking and shooting out spasmodic streaks of flame.

"Kerosene, gasoline!" he panted desperately, and dashed at them. One after the other they hurtled through light outside and an echoing explosion. The brave fire-fighter staggered towards the door. He threw the weight of his powerful frame against it. The door gave way. He went with it prostrate in the hall, and over him, attracted to the spot by his warning cries and the accompanying commotion, stumbled Mr. Porter.

Then the calls of the latter brought all hands under the roof to the scene. It was an exciting five minutes, while Mr. Porter beat out the flames and the other members of the household brought water and dashed it on the dying embers.

It was daylight when Aunt Cordelia found the letter lying on the floor of her room. She opened it to regard its contents with diffating eyes

"I am all through with the drink," it read. "I am a changed man, have made my way in the world and am driven to see you, if only at a distance, once more. Of course you have long since forgotten me, but if my penitence and my redemption appeal to you in the slightest degree send me a single line to the address I give and I will hasten to see you openly."

What her answer would be, the glowing eyes, the kiss she bestowed upon those cherished written lines, her tears, presaged clearly. She was called by her brother into the hall.

"The doctor says our patient will be all right in a day or two, and is comfortably resting now," Mr. Porter said. "Will you sit by him, Cordelia, until mother gets breakfast over?"

Randolph Waters looked up from the couch upon which he lay as Cordelia entered the room. She made no pretense of affectation, or shynes or aversion.

"Randolph!" she said, and sat down beside him and caressed the bandaged hand. "You were the ghost little Buddy saw at the window? You just in time discovered the fire my carelessness caused?"

He smiled an assent, hope and com-

Asks "Why Wait?" When One Feels Love's Impulse

OS ANGELES.—After waiting 30 years before proposing to the sweetheart of his youth, Calvin Mitchell, now fifty-eight years old, feels competent to advise bashful suitors, and that advice is to "speed up." During the 30 years

Surely Here Is Story of Prize Bone-Headed Thief

CLEVELAND.—Joe Elko, 507 South Sangamon street, wishes the emperor of Austria, his former lord and master of his soul, would hang an iron cross on Cleveland's prize bone-headed thief. A generous mood prompts Joe's thought, for he has his old shoes back -also the $685 he had cached in one

Joe came from Austria a few years ago to the land of liberty. He soon found he was at liberty to work on the railroads as a construction laborer and he has been juggling ties, with more or less freedom ever since.

It was a fond notion with Joe that some time he would bring his wife to America. Recently he revised his plan to rend "when the war is ended." He saved his money until he had $685 in bills, real honest to goodness currency of the good old U.S.A. He had been living in the suburbs. He decided to broaden his field of labor and came to Cleveland. So he came, his worldly possessions in his arms. It was no difficulty to move—he had his extra pants and sweater in one parcel, and his old shoes in the other. His savings he had tucked in the toe of one shoe. On a preceding visit he had selected a lodging place at the Sangamon street address. Joe found the right building, but he inadvertently stepped into the wrong hallway-the one at 509 Sangamon street. He knocked at the door, and, receiving no response, laid down his bundles and went to the rear, with which he was better acquainted.

Joe had no difficulty in finding the rear entrance at 507. He went upthe window. Then a great blaze of stairs, passed through the flat and went on the front landing. The bundles were not there.

Joe was troubled, but decided to sleep over it. Then he informed Detective Sergeants Joyce and Smith of the police.

It turned out that the detectives' deductions were correct, for they found the shoes in a pawnshop. And the money, all unconscious of its danger, was still in its hiding place.

"It looks like one of my husband's visiting cards," said Mrs. Pell. She then scrutinized her caller closely. "It is that," said the girl. "I just stopped in to tell you that your husband and I are to be married in about an hour. I thought you might like to Cheese Rolls.—Slice a rather fresh loaf of bread very thin, removing the crusts. Cream together a small jar of pimento cheese or, if made at home, adding the pimentoes to a rich cheese, soften with a little cream or butter if fectly free from the storm, but graduneeded, add a half cupful of finely chopped nut meats and spread the slices with this. Roll up and skewer with tooth picks. Put into a hot oven to toast. Serve with salad, or tea.

Hash Cakes.—Take a pint of wellseasoned mashed potatoes and mix with one onion finely chopped and a half cupful or more of finely minced ham. Form into cakes and brown in bacon fat. The cakes may be rolled in barley flour or cornmeal, which gives them a fine crust and also adds to their nutriment.

When the salad dressing has extracted the juices from the vegetable, makfor baby and rest for mother. For ing it too watery for a dainty salad, just break up a few small salty crackers and stir into the salad to absorb the excess of liquid.

Cabbage Omelet.—Take two cupfuls of hot cooked cabbage, add a tablespoonful of drippings, and a fourth of a cupful of cream, then add two eggs well beaten; mix and pour into a wellgreased frying pan and cook until delicately brown on the under side. Put Into the oven to cook on top, then fold and turn on a hot platter.

White Bread.—Take a plnt of boiling water, two tablespoonfuls of condensed milk, two tablespoonfuls of fat, one and one-half teaspoonfuls of salt, a tablespoonful of sugar, one-half cupful of home-made yeast and three cupfuls of flour. Prepare and bake as usual. This makes two loaves.

THE STORM PARADE.

"Are you ready?" asked old Mr. North Wind.

"We are ready," said all the little

"And Prince Sleet, how about you?" "All ready, Mr. North Wind."

"Then set- Go!" said the north wind. And such a storm as there was. But it was quite the funniest kind of a storm for it seemed to be clear in one place and then all of a you sick and can not salivate. sudden the storm continued.

"We'll start," said old Mr. North Wind, "at one end of the city, and we'll give a parade."

The others did not know at first what a storm parade meant, but old Mr. North Wind explained.

"You see," he said, "we'll start to blow and roar and storm at one end of the city. The other end will be perally, little by little, we will work our way right through the city. Ah, won't we have a joke on the earth people! They will say:

"'See the storm! Isn't it strange? It's hailing here, and down the street

"It's a splendid idea," said Prince Sleet. "I can hardly wait to begin

"Oh," said old King Snow, "must we march? I don't know that I'm very good at marching. I fall most beautifully and I dance about very often before I fall. But as for marching-MEATLESS DISHES FOR MEAT. well, I'm not quite so sure." And he looked rather sad.

"Cheer up, cheer up," said the Storm King. "Old North Wind doesn't care

"We're all ready, then, eh?" asked old Mr. North Wind once more.

"We're all ready," they said. And the earth people shivered, sat closer per, add a tablespoonful of chopped to the fires, and the ones who were outside drew their collars and furs tighter.

"Then-Go!" said old Mr. North Wind. And the storm parade began. In it were the Storm King, King Hail, old King Snow, Prince Sleet, the King of the Clouds, his army of Raindrops the Snowflake children, the Winter Breezes and old Mr. North Wind stones set in them at intervals, others marched ahead carrying a big stick from which they are suspended as made out of icicles which he threw up. drops of bangles; there are pendants, in the air and looked exactly like a drum-major.

Of course the people on the earth could not see him, but they could feel him! Oh, how cold it was! And what a terrific storm!

The city people said that they would not be able to get about and that cars and traffic of all sorts would be de-

But the strangest thing of all was the way the storm acted. It began at one end and went straight through the city but only a section at a time. When it had finished storming in one section it went on down a little further to another, while all the parts around were fine and clear.

The evening newspapers in the city said that the storm was "freakish," and one little girl who was riding in a motorcar with her mother said that they seemed to keep pace with the storm straight down through the city. "Now for a good wind-up," said old King Snow as he blew.

"That's a good expression," said old Mr. North Wind. For even though he was the drum-major of the storm the others made suggestions as to how the storm could be made worse.

And they all ended up by blowing. snowing, sleeting, hailing, raining and freezing harder than ever.

"Oh, it was a gorgeous parade," said old Mr. North Wind. "We moved right along just like a regular parade but

A DEMOCRATIC NEWSPAPER

TOO MUCH FOR GRANTED The papers of Roswell, and of the west side, are taking too much for granted in their political forecasts It may be possible that the predictions advanced by them will prove true, but as yet there iy nothing on which to base so sweeping a prognostication. To say that this or that candidate will have the undivided support of the entire east side is a statement that has no foundation in fact, and one was msde without any sort of an attempt to make a survey of the situation. The mere fact that this or that candidate is a resident of the Pecos Valley, or of Roosevelt county, will have but little weight with the voters. Democrats of the east side are much more likely to look at the personality of candidates for senatorial, judicial and congressional aspirants for office than to primaries. his or their accustomed habitat. The campaign this year will be velt county, subject to the action of the one of more than ordinary importance to the whole citizenship of New Mexico, and to the nation. It is a time so critical that party lines will not be so Democratic primaries. closely observed as in the past. It will be a struggle in which one hundred per cent Americans will count for more than party loyalty. The slogan is much more apt to be national loyalty than partisan fealty, and he who cannot measure up to the full standard is apt to go down in defeat at the polls. The Journal has no criticisms to offer at this time on any of those gentlemen who deem their services indispensible to the government, neither does it see any advantage in the fact that they hail from the east side. It is statesmen that are in demand. Men of ability and men who are capable of raisiag above party advantage when every resource of the nation is in urgent demand and in constant jeopardy. The game of politics must, for the time being, occupy a less conspicuous place than in times of peace. The nation and Presidenn Wilson need patriots much more than politicians; they need men, brainy men, resourceful and vigorous, and such will have a stronger call than will any claim to locality. The probabilities are that Roosevelt county will pay little, or no, attention to where candidates hail from, but will give its support to that man, or men, who are best fitted to help steer the ship of state through the troubled and turbulent stream of wsr and all its hardsuips and uncertainties. The coming Democratic convention will make an irretrievable blunder should it pay any attention, whatever, to where this or that candidate happens to live, so long as he is a bona fide resident of the state.

The American House Manager is today a member of the army that is fighting to save democracy in the world. Food will win the war, and these omen will help to win it. Amer ica must send food to Europe. The armies cannot hold out if we fail to send it. Only certain foods can be shipped—those that pack the most food value into the smallest shipping space. These foods are wheat, meat, fats, sugar. We cannot eat them and send them We cannot eat them and send others. We must send these foods, and in order to do that we must eat other foods ourselves. SHELTER FOR LIVE STOCK

Some of the More Advanced Ideas Relative to Lighting and Sanitation Are Incorporated in the Plans.

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF CCST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building work on the farm, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. According to F. D. Crooks of the Pennsylvania State college school of agriculture and experiment station, the exact value of sour milk as a source of protein, is difficult to state. Numerous feeding trials, however, place its value at 50 cents to $2 per 100 pounds.

Skim milk lowers the cost of producing a dozen eggs. On the farm it may mean the difference between profit and loss in connection with the farm flock. Sour milk has a medicinal effect also. It keeps hens in good health and helps prevent disease.

As has been stated, a frequent cause of failure of such dams is faulty wasteways. The dams being built for the ductive state is being kept at a loss.

MANURE TO INCREASE CROPS

At Pennsylvania It Was Found That Application of Six Tons Was Better Than Ten.

Stable manure has long been considered a very valuable fertilizer. It is usually thought by farmers that the larger the application of manure the greater the crop increase. Experimental data shows that such is not the case. At Pennsylvania it was found that an application of six tons per acre gave a return of $3.29 per ton as compared with $2.29 per ton when ten tons per acre were used. This is a dollar a ton in favor of the lighter application. At the same rate the farmer who has a hundred tons of manure to pread can save nearly enough to pay for his manure spreader. Hand spreadng could hardly put manure on at the ate of six tons. This is not an isoted case. Other work has shown an ctually smaller yield with a large Supply Plenty of Grit.

"But they're very nice; they're lovely; and I've just been complimenting her. Now what has this woman done to you?"

It seemed impossible that a man of Blaze Jones' character could actually harbor crude superstitions, and yet there was no mistaking his earnestmess when he said:

"I ain't sure whether she's to blame, or her husband, but misfortune has Tolded me to herself."

"How?"

"Well, I'm sick," "You don't look it."

"I don't exactly feel it, either, but I am. I don't sleep good, my heart's actin' up, I've got rheumatism, my stomach feels like I'd swallowed something alive-'

"You're smoking too much," Alaire affirmed, with conviction.

But skepticism aroused Blaze's indignation. With elaborate sarcasm, he retorted: "I reckon that's why my best team of mules ran away and dragged me through a ten-acre patch of grass burrs, eh? It's a wonder I wasn't killed, I reckon I smoked so much that I give a tobacco heart to the best three-year-old bull in my pasture! Well, I smoked him to death, all right. CHAPTER XV.

An Awakening.

Time was when Phil Strange boasted that he and his wife had played every fairground and seaside amusement sharply, "but not with me. So, Jose park from Coney island to Galveston. Sanchez has been to see you and you In his battered wardrobe trunks were want to warn me. Is that it?" and her husband have put a jinx on parts of old costumes, scrapbooks of clippings, and a goodly collection of Strange protested. He eyed his caller lithographs, some advertising the su- for a moment; then with an abrupt pernatural powers of "Professor Magi, Sovereign of the Unseen World," and others the accomplishments of "Mlle. tor, saying: "I never did till lately, Le Garde, Renowned Serpent Enchanbut now I'm worse than a plantation tress." In these gaudy portraits of "Magi the Mystic" no one would have recognized Phil Strange. And even more difficult would it have been to trace a resemblance between Mrs. Strange and the blond, bushy-headed "Mlle. Le Garde" of the posters. Nevertheless, the likenesses at one time had been considered not too flattering, and Phil treasured them as evidences of imperishable distinction.

But the Stranges had tired of public life. For a long time the wife had confessed to a lack of interest in her vocation which amounted almost to a repugnance. Snake-charming, she had discovered, was far from an ideal profession for a woman of refinement. It possessed unpleasant features, and even such euphemistic titles as "Serpent Enchantress" and "Reptilian Mesmerist" failed to rob the calling of a certain odium, a suggestion of vulgarity in the minds of the more discriminating. This had become so distressing to Mrs. Strange's finer sensibilities that she had voiced a yearning to forsake the platform and pit for something more congenial, and finally she had prevailed upon Phil to make a change. The step had not been taken without misgivings, but a benign Providence had watched over the pair. Mrs. Strange was a natural seamstress, and luck had directed her and Phil to a community which was not only in need of a good dressmaker but peculiarly ripe for the talents of a soothsayer. covered that Jonesville offered better financial returns to a man of his accepted gifts than did the choicest of seaside concessions, and therefore he had resumed his old calling under a slightly different guise. Before long The man nodded gloomily. "That he acknowledged himself well pleased

But Dave was not easily approachable. He met the medium's allusions to the occult with contemptuous amusement, nor would he consent to a private "reading." Strange grew almost Dave Law been more certain of his desperate enough to speak the ungarnished truth.

"You'd better pay a little attention to me," he grieved; "I've got a message to you from the 'Unseen World.'" "Charges 'collect,' I reckon," the

"No. But evidently you can."

"I'm sorry. They never come back." "Rot!"

Phil was hurt, indignant. With some stiffness he explained the danger of interrupting a seance of this sort, but Law remained obdurate.

"You can put over that second-sight stuff with the greasers," he declared,

"I don't know any such party," change of manner he complained: 'Say, Bo! What's the matter with you? I've got a reputation to protect, and I do things my own way. I'm getting set to slip you something, and you try to make me look like a sucker. Is that any way to act?"

"I prefer to talk to you when your eyes are open. I know all about-" "You don't know nothing about anything," snapped the other, "Jose's got it in for Mrs. Austin."

"You said you didn't know him." "Well, I don't. He's never been to see me in his life, but—his sweetheart has. Rosa Morales comes regular." "Rosa! Jose's sweetheart!" "Yes. Her and Jose have joined out together since you shot Panfilo, and they're framing something." "What, for instance?" The fortune-teller hesitated. "I only wish I knew," he said slowly. "It girl--" "Oh, they don't aim to get you. You ain't the one they're after."

"No? Who, then?" "I don't know nothing definite. In this business, you understand, a fellow has to put two and two together. All the same, I'm sure Jose ain't carving no epitaph for you. At no time since meeting Alaire had moral strength than on this evening; at no time had his grip upon himself seemed firmer. Nor had Alaire the least reason to doubt her self-control. Dave, to be sure, had appealed to her fancy and her interest; in fact, he so dominated her thoughts that the imaginary creature whom she called her dream-husband had gradually taken on his physical likeness. But the idea that she was in any way enamored of him had never entered his mind. In Alaire had gone to her favorite afterdinner refuge, a nook on one of the side galleries, where there was a wide, swinging wicker couch; and there, in lor," he sat back while the medium ers, she had prepared to spend the

such wise do the Fates amuse them-

She did not hear Dave's automobile arrive. Her first intimation of his presence came with the sound of his heel upon the porch. When he appeared, it was almost like the materialization of her uppermost thought quite as if a figure from her fancy had stepped forth full-clad.

She rose and met him, smiling, "How did you know I wanted to see you?"

she inquired.

Dave took her hand and looked down at her, framing a commonplace reply. But for some reason the words lay unspoken upon his tongue. Alaire's informal greeting, her parted lips, the welcoming light in her eyes, had sent them flying. It seemed to him that the Blaze emerged, blinking. He was frightened expression, as of one just might suffer if rudely jerked out of dim half-light which illumined this nook emanated from her face and her "Eh? What was 1-? There! You've person, that the fragrance which came with a poor assumption of breeziness. | Jose Sanchez had beheld Dave Law broke the connection," he declared. | to his nostrils was the perfume of her breath, and at the prompting of these thoughts all his smothered longings rose as if at a signal. As mutinous prisoners in a jail delivery overpower their guards, so did Dave's long-repressed emotions gain the upper hand of him now, and so swift was their uprising that he could not summon more than a feeble, panicky resistance.

The awkwardness of the pause which followed Alaire's inquiry strengthened the rebellious impulses within him, and quite unconsciously his friendly grasp upon her fingers tightened. For her part, as she saw this sudden change sweep over him, her own face altered and she felt something within her breast leap into life. No woman could have failed to read the meaning of his sudden agitation, and, strange to say, it worked a similar state of feeling in Alaire. She strove to control herself and to draw away, but instead found that her hand had answered his, and that her eyes were flashing recognition of his look. All in an instant she realized how deathly tired of her own struggle she had become, and experienced a reckless impulse to cast away all restraint and blindly meet his first advance. She had no time to question her yearnings; she seemed to understand only that this man offered her rest and security; that in his arms lay sanctuary. To both it seemed that they stood there silently, hand in hand, for a very long time, though in reality there was scarcely a moment of hesitation on the part of either. A drunken, breathless instant of uncertainty, then Alaire was on Dave's breast, and his strength, his ardor, his desire, was throbbing through her. Her bare arms were about his neck; a sigh, the token of utter surrender, fluttered from her throat. She raised her face to his and their lips melted together.

AN ATTACK OF GRIP USUALLY LEAVES KIDNEYS IN WEAKENED CONDITION

Doctors in all parts of the country have been kept busy with the epidemic of grip which has visited so many homes. The symptoms of grip this year are often very distressing and leave the system in a rundown condition, particularly the kidneys which seem to suffer most, as almost every victim complains of lame back and urinary troubles which should not be neglected, as these danger signals often lead to dangerous kidney troubles. Druggists report a large sale on Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root which so many people say soon heals and strengthens the kidneys after an attack of grip. Swamp-Root, being an herbal compound, has a gentle healing effect on the kidneys, which is almost immediately noticed in most cases by those who try it. Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., offer to send a sample size bottle of Swamp-Root, on receipt of ten cents, to every sufferer who requests it. A trial will convince anyone who may be in need of it. Regular medium and large size bottles, for sale at all druggists. Be sure to mention this paper.—Adv.
