Mr. A. J. Peters of Pipestone, Minn. writes: "I am just opening out a new farm in southwestern Minnesota. Land has been broken three years. I want to plant out a wind break the coming spring for protection to my bouse, barn and out buildings. What variety of native timber is the best, or would you recommend evergreens, if o, what sizes, varieties," etc.?

This is a very timely and seasonsble letter, and we have reasons to believe there are other farmers scattered over the great Northwest who have the same wants as Mr. Peters.

In the first place we would recommend evergreens as the proper tree to plant out for wind break purposes. They make a very rapid growth, and give the best protection at the time of year that deciduous trees are stripped of their leaves and have but little power of resistance.

An evergreen wind break should be planted back, at least, twenty to twenty-five rods from the house. It land and location will permit take in at least six or seven acres with the belt. Plant out at least two rows of evergreens on the north and west sides, and if location will permit plant some evergreens on the northeast to break of the northeast and eastern winds from your barn. Trees should be planted in rows fourteen feet apart, and the trees twelve feet apart in the rows. But plant nothing but trees that have been grown in nurseries and have been a least twice transplanted. This gives them lots of fiberous roots and prepares the tree to be transplanted with but little if any loss.

Best sizes to plant are 12 to 18 inches or 18 to 24 inches. Best varieties for west and northwestern lows, we would recommend Scotch pine and Austrian pine. If a third row is desired, plant the inside row of White pine or Norway Spruce. But the Scotch and Austrian pine are the two best varieties for planting in the prairie country of the northwest.

Give them good cultivation the first two years after planting, just as you would cultivate an ordinary row of potatoes or corn, after which time the self: only you must protect them from stock of all kinds. A wind break of 200 or 300 evergreens planted out as described above will add $500 to the value of one quarter section; besides being a great blessing in breaking off the piercing winds from the stock of

We are confident that a well planted wind break of evergreens has the effect of reducing the temperature from three to five degrees to the farm home and barns.

Don't forget the Farmers' Institute. Don't say that your work will get behind, but go and read a paper, or listen to those prepared by others. Remember that the prominence of your business and your calling demands that you let the world know what you are doing and why you are doing it. Do not think that there are any secrets in agriculture. If there are, Dame Nature has kept them pretty well locked up.

What are you doing, brother farmer to that boy of yours? You were proud of the bright little chap before he was big enough to work. You perhaps boasted how he always was at the head of his classes before he was big enough to work. Do you want to see that bright young face get hard and the light go out of those eyes and a stoop get into his shoulders, his walk become a "plow-boy" walk, and see all the ambition and finer feeling in his nature dwarfed and stiffled and killed? That is just what you may be doing. Better let him go to school, better let him be a boy. Give him a boy's duties, but not the job of a man. Let him live as a boy and he will be a man soon enough. Of course, this does not really apple to you, but to mibination of concerns con- that other fellow across the fields from

IOWA'S GREAT SCHOOL FOR FARMERS.

Ames has become to be spoken of by many in the west as the Athens of American agriculture. This is the alliterative and distinguishing sobriquet that such achievements as that of school, that closed last Saturday, must win for Iowa's seat of agricultural learning.

There were nearly 1,000 "students" in attendance upon the sessions of the two schools, representing eighteen states of the Union and Canada, Mexico and South America. Among the students were several women who came to learn the distinguishing characteristics of good corn and how to select and breed fine animals. Quite as remarkable in its way was the drainage convention, whose deliberations have an important influence on the future of crop growing in the Hawkeye state. The value of such work is beyond estimate and the inspiration to those who were privileged to participate in it will be an influence and an uplift for all time.

The corn-judging school was under the direction of Prof. Perry G. Holden, and he with his corps of assistants, achieved tasks herculean during the two weeks. Prof. Holden has done a great work for lows in encouraging an intelligent study of corn breeding, and the school just closed has made its real importance manifest to all. What we say of Iowa in equally true of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Illinois, and otherstates, for at the present time the agricaltural colleges of the different states are taking front rank-they are getting the best talent for instructors -together with the cream of our country for their army of pupils-(which comes from the farm) makes a power that is potent along all lines of progressive agriculture.

THE WORK OF THE AGRICULTUR AL COLLEGE.

The colleges are teaching how to grow crops. In the future the burden of teaching must be shifted from the crops to the man who grows them. Bailey says the voice of the schoolhouse will say:

Who will give us a Ben Davis in appearance and productiveness, with a McIntosh or Spitzenburg flavor? Who will come forward with a Concord in vigor and yield, and a Golden Chasseless in quality? How much would a gift of this kind be worth? Who has estimated the value of Ephriams Bull's benefaction to mankind? In giving us the Concord grape or Gideon's gift of the Wealthy apple to Minnesota and other northern states? These are great and grave questions and the possibilities of great develophorticulture never before was so talked and adjutated by our colleges and practical thinking men on the

We doubt not that being a tropical fruit its cultivation will spread very rapidly.

Lime, sulphur and salt make a deadly mixture for scale insects in climates so dry that the coating will not wash off. In the California climate this wash slowly decomposes and gives off polsohous vapors which destroy the insects under it. Rains spoil this effect and leave on the trees only a coat of ordinary whitewash

Old writers in mentioning birch trees seldom failed to say solemnly that they were useful to grow branches with which to give boys thrashings. Turner regards the supply of "flexible, pendent branches" for purposes of punishment as the chief merit of the tree. Coles also based his estimate of the birch chiefly on its use in the supply of rods as instruments of punishment, for he writes: "The civil uses where-unto the birch serveth are many; as, for the punishment of childs n, both at home and at school; for it hath an admirable influence upon them to quiet them when they are out of order, and, therefore, some call it makepeace." In ancient Rome the fasces of the lictors, with which they cleared the way for the magistrates, were formed with rods of birch, and their influence was usually sufficient to insure a rapid dispersion of men assembled where they would impede the passage of the administrators of the law. From that time to within a comparatively recent period the birchen rod was regarded as one of the most important deterrents of juvenile depravity.

English Horse Exhibition.

Annually, in London, a public ex-hibition of work horses is held in Regent's Park. The horses, groomed to the last hair, their manes and tails decorated with gay ribbons, their harness clean and bright, and carts, wagons and drays all spick and span are inspected at the gates by veterin ary surgeons, and if they pass they are reviewed by street department and other city officers, and the drivers of the best cared for horses are awarded substantial money prizes. This annual ceremony is believed to have great influence.

Heavy Demand for Root.
