THE INDEPENDENCE DAY CELEBRATION

All Roosevelt County made merry Monday. The patriotic was an informal affair in which everyone took part and made an enjoyable detraction from work and worry. There was plenty of cold water and lemonade handy of this place, and R. H. "Let no one misunderstand us. American patriotism, supported by the courage and spirit of our people. All this is freely and gladly acknowledged, but surely the time has come when, because of the calculated criticism and premeditated calumnities of the opposition, we are entitled to call attention to the fact that all these things were accomplished under the leadership of a great Democrat and a great Democratic administration. If the Republican leaders are not able to rejoice with us in this American triumph they should have the grace to remain silent, for it does not lie in the mouths of those who conducted the Spanish-American war to indulge in the luxury of criticism."

Referring to congressional in vestigations by "smelling committees," he said that over eighty investigations have been made, over two million dollars wasted, and the result has been to prove that it has been the cleanest war ever fought in the history of civilization.

The Republican party became so fixed in its incorrigible habit of conducting investigations that it finally turned to the fruitful task of investigating itself. They discovered fraud, and graft and gross and inexcusable expenditures. The revelations disclose the fact that meeting at Chicago was not a convention but an auction. The highest bidder, however, did not get the prize. The publicity which overtook the proceedings frustrated the initial purpose. The Chicago convention left the Democratic party as the sole custodian of the honor of

Mr. Cummings said that in one sense "it is quite immaterial what people say about the president. Nothing we can say can add or detract from the fame that will flow down the unending channels of history."

He cited the Republican and Progressive platform of 1916 as part of the record placing this country in favor of the league of nations.

TRADE SHIPS ARE TO BE PROTECTED

FOREIGN INTERESTS NOTI-FIED TO KEEP THEIR HANDS OFF

AGREEMENT ON TRADE ROUTES

Shipping Board Chairman to Study the Agreement and See If It Safeguards American Shipping.

Washington.-Warning foreign . interests not to attempt interference with the development of the American merchant marine Chairman Benson of the shipping board declared that the board was determined to build up an American merchant marine as contempalted by the Jones Shipping act, despite threats and propaganda by such interests to defeat the law.

"The United States," said Admiral Benson, "is in earnest to place within the ownership by the United States citizens, the control of at least part of its traffic in imports and exports. If it should be held that the government departments lack such authority as will insure their being able to protect American interests in such control, additional authority will be asked of congress by the administra-

Threat is Futile.

"Foreign carriers and those in the United States inteersted more in foreign than American institutions will do well to 'let sleeping dogs lie.' "

Admiral Benson's warning was sounded in a talk to representatives of Pacific coast chamber of commerce and trade bodies and American railway representatives which have been disturbed by threats to divert trade from points on the Pacific coast because of the section of the merchant marine act permitting a preferential rate over carriers within the United States on merchandise moving in export and import in American vessels, Such a threat, the chairman said,

"is futile and idle."

Other Steps to Follow.

"If such a threat is sincere and the attempt is made to so divert the business," Admiral Benson continued. "the shipping board will allocate American ships to move the business.

The shipping board and the interstate commerce commission will follow this action by other steps which would further protect the interests of the United States against such foreign efforts to defeat the purpose of the merchant marine act.

Admiral Benson said that in the trans-Pacific trade at this time there seemed to have been specific and successful effort to prevent American vessels from securing return cargoes at certain points while ships of other nations have come with full loads.

The agreement between the Hamburg-American line and the American Ship and Commerce corporation, by which the former German trade routes are to be opened to American shipping has been submitted to the shipping board for its answer, Chairman Benson announced.

Admiral Benson said he had not had an opportunity to go over the agreement, but as a result of conferences with W. H. Harriman, president of the American company, he was confident that the agreement deprived of the officers of military would safeguard the public interest and civil governor of Hunan by presiin every respect and would prove of dential mandates dated June 13 and benefit to the American merchant 29 as well as of his military commarine. He said he intended to make mand. a close study of the contract.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC Friendships That Are Worth While, YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC Friendship: What It Is and What It

The friendship between Jonathan and David is peculiar in that it occurred between two men of rival worldly interests. Jonathan was the crown prince, the heir to the throne. David was the heir according to divine choice and arrangement. Jonathan knew this and magnanimously waived his natural personal rights to the one whom he knew that God had chosen.

Following the interview of Saul and David after the victory over Goliath, Jonathan's soul was knit with that of David. He loved him as his own soul. While there was mutual love, yet this pleasing trait stands out more in Jonathan than in David, because it meant great loss to him-the loss of the throne, but immense gain to Davidthe acquisition of the throne to which he had no natural right. The genuine friendship was shown:

I. By Giving to David His Court

Robe and Equipment (18:4).

These belonged to Jonathan as the crown prince. Following the love-covenant between them (18:3) Jonathan stripped himself of these and gave them to David. This act was virtual abdication in favor of David. "Love seeketh not her own" (I Cor. 13:5). II. By Defending David Against the

Frenzy of Saul (I Sam. 19:1-6). According to oriental custom, the women met David and his soldiers as they were returning from their victory over the Philistines, and with singing and dancing they ascribed more praise to David than to Saul. This stirred up the murderous envy of Saul and moved him to thrice attempt to kill David. In his third attempt Jonathan defended David before his father and evoked from him the oath that David should not be slain (19:6). Thus he exposed himself to the anger of his infurlated father, for David's sake. When one is willing to tay down his life for another he proves that his friendship is real. "Greater love bath his life for his friends" (John 15:13). III. By Revealing to David Sauff's Murderous Intent (I Sam. 20:30-40). The beginning of a new moon was celebrated by sacrifices and feasting, at which all the members of the family were expected to be present (v. 5). David's excuse for absence was to go home to attend the yearly sacrifice of the entire family. This annual feast was more important than the monthly

no man than this that a man lay down

Matters were now so serious that they renewed the covenant between themselves. In its renewal the terms were projected beyond the life of Jonathan (vv. 14, 15). Saul's anger was now so fierce that for Jonathan to be found in company with David was a dangerous thing, so he cleverly plans to give David a sign by which he could know Saul's purpose. We prove our friendship by warning those who are exposed to danger. David's heart responded to Jonathan's love by pledging himself to deal faithfully with Jonathan and his seed forever. Later history proves that this was faithfully carried out (II Sam. 9:7, 8). Some Observations on Friendship:

1. Friendships should be made while the parties are young-while the hearts are capable of being knit to-2. Real friends are few: therefore be careful in the formation of the ties of friendship. Friends should be selected. We should love everybody, but we can have but few friends. 3. There should be some variations in the temperaments in those who would be friends. Friendships should be formed for the purpose of mutually helping each other. Both parties, however, must possess real merit.

4. Both parties must be God-fearing. David and Jonathan both recognized their obligation to the Lord and that his help was essential to the welfare of both. Without a deep religious life there can be no friendship. There are times when one party must absolutely renounce his interests in behalf of the other. Genuine love is the basis of all friendship.

Good Impulses. Few good impulses live long unless they are put to work.

The Glory of Life. To do the things that can't be done s the glory of life.

Greatest Losses. The greatest losses are the losses sis.—Hilary Askew, a young American, inherits from an uncle s hundred square miles of forest in Quebec. Upon taking possession, he dis-sovers all sorts of queer things. Lamartine, his uncle's lawyer, tells him the property is comparatively worthless and tries to induce him to sell. Lafe Connell, the mili foreman, tells him his uncle has been systematically robbed. Morrie, the manager, is associated with the Ste. Marie company, a rival concern owned by Brousseau, the "boss" of the region. Madeleine, the beautiful daughter of Seigneur Rosny, original owner of Askew's land, is pursued by Brousseau, who has her father in his power. The hero decides to stay and menage his property. He discharges Morris and makes Connell manager. He whips "Black" Pierre, foreman of a gang of Brousseau's men cutting on his land. He defies Brousseau. Leblanc, his boss jobber, deserts to the enemy. From Father Lucien Askew learns the story of Marie Dupont, daughter of the captain of a lumber schooner. The girl's mother, now dead, had been betrayed, and she herself is looked on askance and has few friends. Masse knows the name of her mother's betrayer, but has never revealed it to her father. Askew finds Madeleine Rosny hostile to him. Askew and Connell visit a Ste. Marie dance hall.

The news reached Simeon Duval as he was reaching up for a bottle in his closet, and he came puffing out and waddled toward Hilary, his pale-blue eyes fixed on him in malevolent

"Eh, Meestair Askew, you have a drink on me?" asked Simeon, holding out the bottle under Hilary's nose. The action was at once a challenge and an overture, to be interpreted in either fashion, according to the hearer's inclination.

Hilary shook his head. "I don't drink. Simeon," he answered curtly.

"You want to dance, then, eh? You want a lady to dance?"

"Well, that's about all, Simeon, friendly warning, because I never warn when I'm ready to strike."

"My brother take care of himself. He ain't afraid of you," said Simeon, who kept as cool as Hilary. Hilary intuitively summed him up as the most dangerous of his opponents. "But I guess you ain't going like that, Meestair Askew," continued the liquorseller. "I ask you to have a drink on me an' you say no. Now you going to buy drinks all round, eh?"

Hilary laughed out loud. "Not for your crowd, Simeon," he answered. Simeon planted his fat body heavily before him. "What you say? You buy drinks, eh?" he demanded truculently.

Hilary put his hands on Simeon's shoulders and pushed him bodily backward. Simeon, who was planted rather than stood, at first resisted as a tree might resist a gentle shove with the hand; but he could not resist the strength behind Hilary's shoulders, and he began to sway and went top-

Some of the girls shricked, and the lumbermen came surging forward toward Hilary and Lafe and began to hustle them. Yet, knowing Hilary's reputation, they hesitated a moment before initiating hostilities; and that moment brought an unexpected interruption.

For a boy ran screaming in at the door, and what he cried startled the entire assemblage. Simeon, who had een struggling to his feet, was upon them in an instant. But before the crowd had recovered from its confusion two officers in the uniform of the revenue department came running in. They carried revolvers in their hands, and they pounced upon Simeon and had him at their mercy in an instant. At once the whole scene was dissolved. Men and girls ran this way and that, a wildly flying, panicky mass. Ste. Marie, but quite another to defy the tireless officials of the revenue deuncertain intervals, whose arms were very long.

Hilary bent over her. Lafe saw that his face was stern. "I am going to take you home," he said.

She looked up at him piteously. She appeared to recognize him, but was too terrified to understand. He drew her to her feet and, with Lafe on the other side, they began to make their way quickly toward the beach by a narrow passage among the cottages.

But as they started Lafe looked back and saw, wedged in the crowd behind them, Jean Baptiste. He had been trying to reach the girl, but it was imposhuman torrent. He saw them, and his eyes were dilated with impotent fury. There was murder in them as they fell upon Hilary. Lafe shuddered.

His inspulse was to wait for the man, but he recognized that Baptiste was had misinterpreted Hilary's action; the only thing now was to elude him and get the girl away before Baptiste could follow. He was glad Hilary had not seen Baptiste. He meant to say nothing of it.

The three set out on their way Marie at first sobbing and holding back, then gradually growing calm under Hilary's assurances, and at last going willingly. Her dress was draggled with mud, her finery awry; she looked pitiful and frightened. Hilary felt a great wrath growing in him as he looked at her. At last they gained the shore road and presently reached Marie's cottage.

She felt in her dress for the key with shaking fingers. Hilary took it from her and opened the door. "Never go to that place again," he said sternly. "Let this be a lesson to you!"

She went inside. Lafe and Hilary waited till the lamp was lit and, through the torn shade, they saw Marie Dupont crouched before the stove, her face on her arms.

"I guess we'd better be going, Lafe," he said.

"I hope so. I've seen enough this evening, Lafe. It makes me sick to think that there are wretches vile enough to encourage this, for money or for influence." He turned on him. "If I can trace Brousseau's hand in this work," he said, "heaven help him!"

YOU NEVER CAN TAME A WILD-CAT

Mr. Dodson Warns Against Use of Treacherous, Dangerous Calomel.

Calomel salivates! It's mercury. Calomel acts like dynamite on a sluggish liver. When calomel comes into contact with sour bile it crashes into it, causing cramping and nausea.

If you feel billous, headachy, constipated and all knocked out, just go to your druggist and get a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone for a few cents which is a harmless vegetable substitute for dangerous calomel. Take a spoonful and if it doesn't start your liver and straighten you up better and quicker than nasty calomel and without making you sick, you just go back and get your money.

If you take calomel today you'll be sick and nauseated tomorrow; besides, it may salivate you, while if you take Dodson's Liver Tone you will wake up feeling great, full of ambition and ready for work or play. It's harmless, pleasant and safe to give to children; they like it.—Adv.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is senefited, to those who are in need of it.

EXPERT ADVICE ON SUBJECT

War-Time Potato Regulations Proved Merits of Standard Grades-Bureau of Markets to Recommend Classifications.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

If an expert conclusively demonstrated a method to you whereby you could increase the profits from your business 10, 20 or 50 per cent, would you throw him out of the house? Or would you embrace him as did a group of Michigan potato growers when the bureau of markets, United States department of agriculture, offered suggestions - expert advice - regarding the formation of a potato growers' exchange and the business methods that the exchange should use?

Today the potato growers concerned are very glad they adopted the latter course. for in less than a land northern grown onlons, strawber-first-class shape, the farmer loses confidence in the buyer and regards him as dishonest. To Eliminate Distrust.

These are conditions that should not exist, and the bureau of markets has set about in a very practical way to belp eliminate them. It maintains that in the marketing of produce there should be a common and uniform basis of understanding. The various kinds of marketing produce should be known by grades, and the specifications for any particular grade should be the same everywhere. For example, potatoes of No. 2 grade should be No. 2 potatoes throughout the entire country and not No. 1 grade in certain sections. And if the farmer agrees to ship No. 2 potatoes they should conform to the specifications for that grade. By eliminating the confusion resulting from a particular grade of produce having one meaning to the farmer and another to the buyer, a foundation of mutual understanding is established.

That the use of standard grades is readily appreciated by producers and buyers altke, was evidenced during the war, when the food administration required licensed dealers to use potato grades recommended by the bureau of markets. The results were so satisfactory that when the regulation was canceled the use of potato grades, to a large extent, was continued voluntarily.

The bureau of markets has recommended grades for potatoes. Bermuda year's time it placed in their pockets | ries and rice. It has established more than a quarter of a million dollars over what they would have had otherwise.

There is no dark secret about how this was accomplished. In fact, the achievement can be duplicated by othare Although to be sure the success of the Michigan potato growers was due largely to the co-operative feature of the enterprise, an individual may secure a proportionate result by applying the same business principles in marketing his farm products.

The fundamental principle that has animated the bureau of markets in its work is that distribution of farm products requires mutual understanding and confidence between producer and buyer. If a farmer states that he has shipped to market a carload of highgrade produce which upon arrival is found to be of inferior quality, naturally the purchaser questions the farmer's integrity and does not depend upon his word in the future. On the other hand, should a buyer allege that produce was received in bad condition, when, as a matter of fact, it was in

It has recently prepared tentative wool grades with a view ulti- been added to the materials used for supplies the shoulder straps and mately to recommending standard making them and ribbons have re- makes the little blossoms set on where grades of that commodity. A complete classification of cattle, calves, hogs, sheep and goats has been adopted by the bureau for use in reporting live stock market prices. A similar classification is in use for reporting wholesale meat quotations. Consideration is also being given the question of having representatives demonstrate United States grain grades to European countries for the purpose of familiarizing dealers there with the standards upon which international transactions with the United States should be based.

Hay Producers Feel Need.

In the matter of hay farmers admit that the marketing of the commodity is a hazardous undertaking because of the possibility of loss due to misunderstanding, lack of inspection, variations in grades in different markets, differences in the manner in which rules for grading are interpreted, and because of sharp practices. In fact, many farmers have stated that ninetenths of the losses in the hav business are due to lack of standard grades and a uniform, impartial inspection service. Not only does the use of standard grades result in better understanding and confidence between producers and buyers, but in greater satisfaction because of increased monetary returns. Farmers everywhere are urged to con duct their business of marketing upon the sound business principle advocated by the bureau of markets. The bureau will be glad to advise anyone desiring the various grades it recommends.

WAYS OF PROTECTING ANIMALS FROM FLIES

Covering With Burlap Is One Effective Plan.

Leather Nets or Strips Attached to Horse's Bridle Aids in Keeping Pest Away From Work Stock -Darkened Stable Good.

The importance of taking steps to prevent the breeding of stable flies rather than depending on protection of the stock when the flies are fullgrown cannot be emphasized too much. However, where this is not done the farmer is forced to resort to various means of warding off the flies.

Work animals may be protected largely from the pest by means of coverings. One type of covering which has been found to be very effective and inexpensive consists of a blanket made of double thickness of burlap, so arranged as to cover completely the back, sides, and neck of the animal. The legs also are covered sometimes by means of old trousers slipped over the feet and tied over the back. Leather nets or strips of leather attached to the bridle also aid in keeping the flies from the head. Completely darkened stables offer much protection from the flies, although the resulting lack of ventilation is objectionable. The thorough screening of all windows and doors is much more desirable. When screened barns are used, care should be taken to brush the flies from the animals, when they are about to enter, by means of nets over the doorway or with sacks. Little can be done to protect range stock from the flies.

On hog farms a freshly plowed trench offers considerable protection to the swine. The sides of these trenches may be smeared with petroleum, which rubs off on the animals and acts as a repellent. The trench may be used also for protecting sheep, but the petroleum in their case is un-

THE PRISONER OF ZENDA

By ANTHONY HOPE

Prof. William Fenwick Harris

Anthony Hope known outside the world of books as Sir Anthony Hope Hawkins, was born in London, Feb. 9, 1863, the son of a clergyman. He married an American woman. It is to be hoped he may have many more children of the brain to follow in the footsteps of "The Prisoner "The Dolly Dialogues.' cated at Marlborough, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he took honors in letters and was president of the Oxford Union, which neans that he was already a man of mark in his undergraduate days. By way of a profession he became a barrister of the Middle Temple in 1877. But if the pursuit of the law interferes with the production of a thrilling tale may he never have a case to prepare. His first book was "The Prisoner of Zenda," which has probably remained his best known one. It had a large hearing when turned to the stage, and the public demanded a sequel, which came in "Rupert of Hentsau." After Zenda quickly followed "The Dolly Dialogues," which, by their easy and debonaire grace, inevitably suggest Lawrence Sterne. His books have been numerous, as "The King's Mirror" and "Tristam of Blent," and he has written plays as well, as "The Adventure of Lady Ursula." touch of sureness and precision lend distinction to his prose; he has an unusual power of interesting his readers in his personages and their doings.

for the person and life of the king. Yet such was the struggle between Black Michael and Rudolf Rassendyll, ly managed. both of the royal house of Elphberg, but of very differing antecedents. The one was well known to the royal palace at Strelsau; the other was at an accident, dating from the year 1733, Ruritania, paid a visit to London. There he was courteously entertained and was a great favorite with the hastily under a cloud, but not before pass. he had fought a somewhat sanguinary duel with Countess Amelia's husband. nose and the dark red hair of the royal house of Ruritania.

The years pass, many of them, and another Rudolf of Elphberg is about to be crowned king of Ruritania. The same nose, the same red hair distinguish him. The loyal half of the population of Ruritania could not sleep at night till the coronation was safely over. For the late king had left another son, by a second and morganatic marriage, Black Michael, duke of Strelsau and lord of Zenda. Though Michael bore none of the marks of the Elphbergs, he had been his father's favorite, and he cast a longing eye on blackguards of Ruritania seconded his wish, for Michael was a man after their own hearts.

Curious that young Rudolf Rassendyll should be moved by an idle curiosity to witness the coronation of Ru-Colonel Sapt, aide to the king, and as they came upon the young Englishman in the forest of Zenda, making his way afoot to Strelsau. So, too, thought the king when he appeared a moment later. But scandals of the past can no more be concealed in Ruritania than in England. As young Rassendyll later told the tale, first the king frowned, "then gradually the corners of his mouth began to twitch, his nose came down (as mine does when I laugh). his eyes twinkled, and, behold, he burst into the merriest fit of irrepressible laughter, which rang through the woods and proclaimed him a joviar asked Mr. Dubwaite as he sipped his not forfeit your majesty's favor.' "'By heaven! you'll always enjoy the king's countenance,' he laughed, 'whether I like it or not.'"

All the good fellowship in the world, however, could not permit royal scandals of the past to be raked up at a coronation. Rudolf Rassendyll must not show his face at this moment in the capital of Rudolf of Ruritania. "But by thunder," cried the king, "you shan't leave Ruritania today. For you shall dine with me tonight, happen what will afterward."

That was just the trouble, "happen what will afterward." One bottle led to another, until they were all as full of wine as they had any right to be. At last the king set down his glass and leaned back in his chair.

"'I have drunk enough,' said he.

"'Far be it from me to contradict the king,' said I. Indeed, his remark was most absolutely true so far as it went. But still another bottle-this from Black Michael, praying that he drink for the love that he bears his brother. Could the king refuse? He could not. Was the wine drugged? The morning answered yes.

"'If he's not crowned today,' cried Sapt, 'I'll lay a crown he's never crowned.'

"'By heavens, why?'

"The whole nation's there to meet him; half the army—aye, and Black Michael at the head-shall we send word that the king's drunk?'

"'That he's ill,' said I, in correction. "'Ill!' echoed Sapt, with a scornful laugh. 'They know his illness too well. He's been ill before! As a man grows old he believes in fate. Fate sent you here. Fate sends you now to Strelsau.

I had to make love for another; and that to a girl whoprincess or no princess—was the most beautiful I had ever seen. How I succeeded in carrying out my program will appear hereafter."

How they fell in love, he with her the throne; all the cut-throats and and she with him, is part of the story. And how, forgetting self, he rescued the king, and robbed himself of love and throne and almost life. When he had fallen sorely wounded:

"Fritz," he called, "is the king still

"Aye, friend—dear friend;" said he ender as a woman, "thanks to the most gallant gentleman that lives, the king is alive!"

All's well that ends well. But of the Princess Flavia?

"If I can never hold sweet converse again with her, or look upon her face, or know from her her love, why, then, this side the grave, I will live as becomes the man she loves; and for the other side I must pray a dreamless there was a lawn and green grass that he whistled for very joy. "Mr. and Mrs. Robin put their heads on one side and listened and then put their heads on the other side and listened.

"'Isn't it nice,' said Mr. Robin, 'to think he is enjoying it so?'

"'Ah, yes,' said Mrs. Robin. 'I fear sometimes we get a little selfish and forgetful of all the creatures who are not fortunate enough to have green lawns; and cool baths when it is dry weather, in little pans of water which are fixed here for us.

"We have so much that is lovely. And above, we can see the clouds moving along, going so rapidly along! After the rain they dash across the sky, clearing it all up for the fine weather, chasing the dark clouds away.

"'It makes us sing when the sun shines and when the rain comes and cools off things. But I think, dear Mr. Robin, it would be nice if you sang one of your best songs for the city

"You could just let the city man, who is so happy at the sight of the country that he is whistling for very joy, know that even the little robins are glad to help make the holiday a pleasant one. Why don't you sing him a song?"

"'I will,' said dear, obliging little Mr. Robin.

"So he sang a song, and the man stopped whistling and listened, and then, when it was through, he tried to whistle notes as the robin had sung, and Mrs. Robin chirped and said: 'That is fine, fine. We love to hear you whistle and to hear the joyful sounds in your voice!

FOR "FLU"

Keep Your Liver Active, Your System Purified and Free From Colds by Taking Calotabs, the Nausealess Calomel Tablets, that are Delightful, Safe and Sure.

Physicians and Druggists are advising their friends to keep their systems purified and their organs in perfect working order as a protection against the return of influenza. They know that a clogged up system and a lazy liver favor colds, influenza and serious complications.

To cut short a cold overnight and to prevent serious complications take one Calotab at bedtime with a swallow of water-that's all. No salts, no nausea, no griping, no sickening after effects. Next morning your cold has vanished, your liver is active, your system is purified and refreshed and you are feeling fine with a hearty appetite for breakfast. Eat what you please—no danger. Calotabs are sold only in original sealed packages, price thirty-five cents. Every druggist is authorized to refund your money if you are not perfectly delighted with Calotabs.—(Adv.)
