Miniature Locomotives Centennial Attractions

A collection of models of locomotives, ranging from the design of Isaac Walton based on the rocket principle to the giant Mallet articulated triplex compound mountain giant of the Erie railroad, was brought to Cisco today by the brother of the genius whose skilled hands fashioned the miniature models of wood and ivory.

There are 16 models, each of them so perfectly constructed as to scale and detail that the most exacting engineers have found no fault with them. Black India ebony, ivory and mother-of-pearl are the principal woods used. All the intricate fittings, even to unions and elbows on the tiny pipes, the bell cords, the levers and almost microscopic rivets in the tenders and cabs, and all the bewildering intricacy of machinery exactly in detail with that of the real locomotive, are carved of ivory. Even the rims of the drivers are of ivory. Ebony wood is used for the bodies. It is unpainted.

In the Mallet Triplex locomotive model there are 10,004 parts. It required 1,368 hours to carve. Each of the models moves its parts in exactly the same fashion as does the real locomotive from which it is designed.

All of the amazingly perfect and delicate work was done by hand, said Fred Warther, Swiss, and a brother of the artist who constructed them, Ernest Warther of Dover, O. Warther, who carved the models entirely by hand in his hours off his job with a steel mill, fashioned the knives, with detachable blades, with which he did and continues his carving. Those used on the 16 models shown are exhibited with them.

The models were leased by the New York Central railroad at one time for three years, Mr. Warther travelling more than 13,000 miles in exhibiting them. He rejected an offer of $50,000 for the models, which cover a history of steam locomotion from the year 1820, when Newton's impractical model was dated, until the present.

At the moment, Fred Warther said, his brother is engaged in carving a model of one of the new stream-lined locomotives. All this work, as that on the present models, is done from blueprints obtained of the designs of the real engines. These are reduced to a scale of half an inch to the foot. None of the work is done on lathes or with any tools except the carving knives, files and sandpaper.

Fred Warther is taking the collection to the Texas Centennial exposition at Dallas. A small generator, seated on the front of the car, generates the power by which the mechanisms of the models is turned.

The locomotive exhibit will be here until 8 or 9 o'clock tonight.

This, the centennial year, will

WATERS RISE AS RESCUERS WORK VAINLY

Miscalculation Seen By Workmen Near Trapped Men

MOOSE RIVER, Nova Scotia, April 20 (AP)—Tired rescue workers reported this afternoon that they feared they had miscalculated the position of the gold mine chamber in which were the two living men, and one dead man, who had been trapped in the mine for a week. The workers said they had missed the old shaft in which the men were caught, after reporting they had but five feet to go through solid rock to reach the victims.

TORONTO LAWYER REPORTED DEAD

ornaments for tie pins, kerchiefs rings for Boy Scout neckpieces, and a variety of personal ornaments, is a striking piece of work. The component pieces are glued together and the business of carrying the product by hand goes through a series of operations which Mr. Fitzgerald has organized after the progressive manner of a factory. He first cuts the pieces, then glues them, then does the rough carving and then the finishing work, going all through the lot with one operation before following with the second. Book ends of naturally rough wood, ornamented with clever drawings of prospectors and pioneers with oxen and covered wagons and log cabins, most of which are beset by the menace of bears and rattlesnakes and other creatures of the wild, are another of his interesting products.

But the most interesting of his products—of which I saw only the photograph, however—was a herd of 90 cattle, all individually carved, grouped in front of a couple of cowboys and a wagon train, representing a drive up the old Chisholm trail. It took six months of intermittent work to complete that masterpiece. Mr. Fitzgerald says he plans another group with more and smaller cattle.

Fall of Harar Soon Predicted In African War

(By Associated Press)
Reliable Italian sources today said that troops of General Rodolfo Graziani, commander of the southern army, were engaged in the fourth day of a powerful drive against Harar, Ethiopia's second largest city.

It was believed capture of the strategic point was imminent. Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin declared that the only way to obtain European peace was to be ready to fight for it if necessary.

The Ethiopian government has established a guard over the American and other foreign legations in Addis Ababa, but claimed they need not fear for safety.

Ready in Mediterranean
Italy was preparing for any Mediterranean eventuality by the formation of a special naval landing force similar to the American marines. Navy leaves were expected to be cancelled and an air force was standing by.

The Italians were reported nearing Addis Ababa. A fascist spokesman at Geneva told the unsuccessful peace makers that "a thousand motor lorries are already rolling" toward the Ethiopian capital as diplomats surveyed the collapse of their peace efforts.

A French newspaper declared that a plan to fortify Belgium against possible German attack was developed in a conference of British, French and Belgium general staffs in London. It said it understood that Britain asked Belgium to build a defense line and two forts and to make provisions for flooding the line in event of aggression.

French league circles said that Britain and France have postponed discussion of additional sanctions against Italy until after the French elections April 26 and May 3. The agreement was considered as putting an end to French-Anglo differences in the European crisis.

SYNOPSIS: Iris Lanning has been taken from her small town Pennsylvania home to New York, and the gay life which centers about Iris' Aunt Phina. In addition, Iris has apparently made a conquest of Allan Beckley, who is the most eligible bachelor in New York, and of irreproachable old stock to boot. But when she and Allan drove miles up the Albany Post Road to a lonely tavern early one morning, she was a little perturbed. Everybody also seems to have thought nothing of it, however—even Aunt Phina.

REMAKING CAMILLA
Iris puzzled a little about Honora. She was housekeeper and more or less maid; but she was also in a way Aunt Phina's confidante, nearly companion. Iris liked Honora. She had something steady and wise about her. But she felt that there was a little mystery, too. Though when Honora came in with the tray, a handsome competent gray-haired Irish upper servant, the idea faded.

She had time to pull her thoughts together as she lay back against her heaped pillows in her lace-and-furrowed-rose dressing-jacket, tasting the tea and cinnamon toast which really should have been breakfast. It was queer to lose practically a day out of time this way.

In the light of Aunt Phina's attitude, and of broad daylight, she felt rather more than last night that she'd been an idiot, clinging to Aunt Ella's funny code of 1890 in a freer braver wiser world.

And Allan Beckley was doubtless saying, Allan who had been such a comfort, after the shock of Morgan's engagement, with his gentleness and admiration, "I won't bother with a girl who has that attitude toward life." Her pride was hurt, and she was feeling more country-mouse than she had since the first day, as if she'd muffed things, when the telephone rang.

"Good afternoon," said the easy voice at the other end of the wire.

"Allan! Still liking her, still her friend? Then he didn't mind her being an idiot!"

"Oh, when did you wake up?" she asked.

"You don't sound so much awake yourself," said the voice.

"What do you think? All the rest went to the Stock club and are pulling a line of being wronged because we lost them. I told them we had the better 'ole, don't you think so?"

"It was an adventure!" She wouldn't be Miss Prudence any more!

"That's what I like about you, Life's all an adventure to you yet, an excitement. I suppose"—his voice was teasing—"even driving down to look at your new house on Long Island with me tomorrow would be exciting. We may meet your aunt there, or it may turn out I am kidnaping you for ransom, of course. Want to take a chance? Ten, say."

"She laughed. 'I'll try you once more. If we get lost again I'll have made money, this time."

She rose and dressed, light-hearted. She couldn't help being a bit thrilled and pleased at all this. The telephone rang again, Camilla.

"Can I come up to tea?" she said.

"Oh, do!"
She got downstairs as Camilla came in.

"What did happen after we went?" she demanded.

Camilla laughed. She settled back in her chair. She was at ease with Iris by now, and in the gray dress which modeled her strong handsome statuesque figure, instead of trying to make her look adolescent, she was rather attractive.

The glasses and the eager frown and careless make-up, the hunched shoulders, were really all that was wrong. Camilla was not the fashionable type, but she had her own possibilities.

"You and Allan vanished entirely," she said. "As Dicky said, the idea of taking him off that way was the slickest thing he ever saw. The rest of us went trustfully to the Stock club. When you didn't turn up we went to Georgia's and had some breakfast and went home. Where on earth were you and Allan? Georgia made a terrible row."

"We drove to a place called the Chateau, way past Tarrytown," said Iris. "Allan Beckley thought that was where it was, and I thought he knew. And then the differential broke, and nobody came."

Camilla gave a delighted shriek. "Georgia's last year's hangout! Oh, grand! It served her right. She telephoned at intervals all over the world. She was worse than a cat with her robin stolen."

"But I didn't take him off. I thought—" She changed the subject, jumping at the next thing in her mind. She had awakened this afternoon to a delightful world; she wanted everybody to be as lucky as she was.

"Camilla, why do you wear glasses?"

Camilla jumped, then said, "Why—why—to read with."

"Then why don't you leave them off except for reading, and carry round the funny bone kind that never look as if they belonged to you, instead?"

"Because I'm awkward; because it doesn't matter how I look. I've been told ever since I was born I was uglier than a hedge fence—not that I ever saw one." Camilla spoke quietly, but a flush covered her face. "So I simply haven't tried. Mother's given up trying to make me."

"You aren't. It does matter how you look. You do care, you do want people to like you. Do let me help, Camilla!"

"Do you care?" said Camilla, in blank astonishment. It was a new idea to her, evidently, that anyone could.

"Of course I do! Camilla—I'll tell you—I have a wonderful idea! Let's fence and tap dance together. It will keep mine up for me. You can't feel awkward when you do that! And Owen said you wouldn't be plain if you didn't think so."

"Did he? Did Owen say that?" The girl lighted so that for the moment she was really pretty. "I could drive over from our place to Woodlands easily. There's a big gym in the basement, we all used to go over there before everything happened, when Georgia was engaged to Jim. I don't think Georgia should be so proud because Jim drowned himself for her sake, do you? And yet," said Camilla wistfully, "it would be wonderful to have anyone care that much."

Iris had never heard the story as directly as this. She gave a little shiver.

"No, I don't. I think it's horrid. But I'd love to have you do it."

The end of it was that Camilla went away aglow, with her glasses in her handbag, and her shoulders straight.

Iris had kissed Camilla good-by in that glow of affection for people which always came to her when she'd been doing things for them. Only one thing worried her; and she'd straighten that out with Phina.

"Phina,"—she came straight out with it—"I don't want to be an old-fashioned, prim 'Miss Prudence,' as Allan Beckley calls me—but—they brought me up in the old-fashioned way; I'm a little at sea."

Phina was tired and eye-ringed; she was lounging and having a whisky and soda before dinner, which wasn't like her. Phina guarded her health very carefully.

"You mean," said Phina sharply, "how far to let men go? There isn't any rule—except, don't lose your head, and remember men don't like things they get for nothing. On the other hand, don't be prim, unless you can make it an interesting part of your line. I'm not Dorothy Dix! if a girl knows how to handle men, she knows; and if she doesn't she doesn't."

"I see," said Iris slowly. But she did not see at all; except that Aunt Phina and she did not talk the same language.

But she had found out one thing; that to this strange gay brusque hastening world with the half-guessed rules she was charming and she could, if things went as they were going, play a principal part.

She had been a minor character at home, where her father had been the hero and her aunt the leading lady. This was a world where the young had the leads. She mattered—frighteningly—delightfully. All her youth and daring rose to meet the part Phina was giving her a chance to play.

It did not seem incredible to her that this was happening. She was young, and when you are young the best seems only natural. But she did wonder a little why she was so lucky; and things people had said began to drift through her head in answer. A phrase of Dicky's—"You got a new line. You make a man feel all liked and set up." And Georgia's bitter, unwilling tribute:

"Phina knew her onions when she imported you. Just the background and scenery to make a bit with a lot of people who were tired of jazz and modernism. The old-fashioned romantic damsel, complete with accomplishments and dialogue out of the arch eighties."

"They do like me! They do think I'm charming!" she exulted. (Copyright, 1936, Margaret Wilddemer)

BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

If thou return to the Almighty, thou shalt be built up, thou shalt put away iniquity far from thy tabernacles. Then shalt thou lay up gold as dust, and the gold of Ophir as the stones of the brook.—Job 22: 23, 24.

When one that holds communion with the skies has filled his urn where those pure waters rise, And once more mingles with his meager things, It is even as if an angel shook his wings.—COWPER.

Remember: If God made his angels winds, and his ministers a flaming fire, much more are those living fountains which carry his gift to their thirsty fellow-men, his angels.—MacDonald.

Making Texas Farm-Minded

J. E. McDONALD, commissioner of agriculture for Texas, is making an effort to make Texas agriculture-minded in connection with the centennial celebration this summer. He advocates selling the agricultural opportunities of Texas to centennial visitors.

WHILE Texas is advancing its opportunities for industry and commerce and the development of its natural resources, it should not neglect its greatest asset, its farms. A great and well-developed agricultural industry is the essential basis for whatever prosperity may be sought. A well-rounded state program demands the best realization of the resources of its soil. Eastland county presents a good example of fact. Its soil has been neglected. Once a banner cotton producing county, its agricultural resources have been neglected through a combination of influence produced by the oil boom and by the failure of its leaders to see the farming values it does have.

Their Responsibility

EASTLAND COUNTY voters apparently have legalized the sale of beer in this county, voting to modify the local option dry status of the county to this extent in Saturday's election. The Cisco Daily Press feels gratified in that its advocacy of this as a measure for better control of the liquor business and for the more effective promotion of temperance and law enforcement was approved.

THERE is only one way to justify that support. It is by seeing to it that the business is conducted in strict accordance with the law and with public decency. Such places as have flourished under prohibition must go. The bootlegging of whiskey and other strong drinks in connection with the legal sale of beer must stop.

Among The Derricks

DEEP TEST PLANNED IN CALLAHAN COUNTY

ABILENE, April 20.—Hal Hughes, Abilene contractor, and others have made location three miles northeast of Oplin in south Callahan county for a 4,500 to 5,000-foot oil and gas test for Ellenberger production. Spudding on the rotary machine is scheduled this week.

All equipment, including a 125-foot steel derrick, is on location. It is approximately 600 feet from an abandoned gas well owned by Superior Oil company which was said to be flowing 1,000 gallons of casinghead gasoline per week.

The Ordovician test is on the T. A. Irwin farm, and is in the northeast corner of the northeast quarter of section 349, George W. Denton survey, about 25 miles southeast of Abilene.

NINE WELLS COMPLETED ON ABILENE AREA

ABILENE, April 20.—Nine completions for this area during the week added a total daily potential of approximately 6,500 barrels, as one wildcat test a mile north of the Hawley field in Jones county was showing possible production from Bluff Creek sand Friday. Humphrey staked locations for four twin wells. At Hawley, four wells were gauged and two were preparing for completion this week-end.

North of Field One mile north of the field, the Fain-McGaha Oil corporation of Wichita Falls No. 1 Nettie Hayden, located in the Hayden 400-acre tract in G. Martinez survey No. 196, was setting liner before cleaning out to test a showing of oil obtained from 2,091-95 feet. Six-inch casing had been underreamed to 2,085 feet, and sandy lime was topped at 2,090 feet.

South of Hawley Half a mile south of Hawley, the Gist & Grady No. 1 G. C. Ranson, in the B. M. Clopton Depth was 2,206 feet. It will be drilled into the pay by the first of the week.

Application was made for drilling of four twin wells in the field by Thomas D. Humphrey. Locations applied for are 50 feet from his Nos. 1, 5, 6 and 9. The No. 1 well produces from 2,060 feet, the No. 5 from 2,063, and the No. 6 from 2,069 feet.

Another wildcat test north of the field, the R. C. Parker No. 1 C. L. Brown was underreaming eight-inch casing to case off water flowing from the upper Tannehill sand. It is located in section 2, T&NO survey.

Ungren & Frazier No. 1 Mrs. Helen Wood, located in section 53, block 15, T&P survey, northeast of Hawley, was fishing after eight-inch pipe collapsed on tools lost in the hole.

Martin No. 1 Mrs. G. B. Triplett, southeast of the field, was being plugged after drilling water in the King sand below 2,300 feet. It is in section 195, G. Martinez survey.

Laughing Around the World With IRVIN S. COBB

A Violent Disposition

By IRVIN S. COBB

A COLORED man, on appearing for work one morning wore a countenance so battered that almost one might have been pardoned for assuming that its owner had made a more or less successful effort to run it through a meat chopper. The white man for whom the scarred and bruised victim worked took one look at that disfigured face and threw up both hands in horror and sympathy.

"Great heavens, boy," he cried, "what have you been doing to yourself?" "Me? I ain't been doin' nothin' to myseff," explained the darky.

"But somethin' is done been did to me, Mr. Watkins. It's lak dis, sub; Yistiddy evenin' I got into a kind of an argymint wid another nigger an' one word led to another, ez it will. An' purty soon I up an' hauled off an' hit at him wid my fist."

"Well, seemed lak that irritated him. So he took an' split my lip wid open wid a pair of brass knucks, an' he blacked dis eye of mine clear down to my armpit an' he toke one ear moughty nigh loose from de side of my head, an' den, to cap all, he knocked me down and stomped up an' down 'pun my stomach wid his feet. Honest to Gawd Mr. Watkins, I never did get so sick of a nigger in all my life!"

survey, was running eight-inch to 1,500 feet.

Humphrey No. 1 Radford, about seven miles north of Abilene, was preparing to spud for a 2,400-foot test. It is in section 19, block 16, T&P survey.

In the Lueders field, two tests were gauged early this week and two others were showing as producers, all from the Hope sand. Ungren & Frazier No. 3 J. W. Jennings, north offset to the City of Stamford reservoir well, made 204 barrels from Hope pay topped at 1,934 and drilled to 1,940 feet.

Bridwell & Fikes No. 5 Jennings was a 103-barrel completion from the same sand east of present production; and late this week the Ungren & Frazier No. 4 Jennings, west offset to the Bridwell & Fikes No. 5 Jennings, was drilled in from 1,945-48 feet and filled 1,700 feet with oil in an hour and a half.

Peckham and Danciger No. 1-B city of Stamford was reported having made several heads from the Hope lime and was shut in. These tests are in the northeast quarter of section 207, BBB&C survey.

Blugs Back

Lesh & McCall No. 1 Jennings, a failure in King sand and plugged back from 2,075 feet, perforated casing with a shot and treated Hope lime with acid. It was estimated after cleaning out to be approximately a 100-barrel well. It is in the northwest quarter of section 1, I&GN survey.

Sandy Ridge Oil corporation No. 4 Percy Jones was on production gauge this week, making approximately 80 to 100 barrels flowing from agitation. It had swabbed 87 1/2 barrels on an unofficial gauge following a nitro shot last week. It is in section 5, block 15, T&P survey.

Operators Knight & Ewing of Breckenridge made location for a 410-foot south offset to their No. 1 J. D. Farrow, and rig was being assembled this week-end. Location is 610 feet from the north and 200 feet from the east line of section 6, block 15, T&P survey, west of the Sandy Ridge production.

Roeser & Pendleton No. 1 Hauk, in the southwest corner of the Hauk 60 acres in section 1 T&NO survey, 500 feet northeast of the Sandy Ridge No. 4 Jones, was spudded and drilling past 750 feet.

Pierson and Danciger No. 1 T. J. White, in section 6, block 15, T&P survey, set eight-inch casing to 1,755 feet this week and was drilling ahead at 1,800. Operators expected to reach Bluff Creek sand this week-end.

Abandoned

Two miles northwest of Nugent, also in eastern Jones, the George Callihan No. 1 Mrs. G. H. Higgs was abandoned at a total depth of 3,390 feet. It is in the W. T. Scot survey No. 2.

S. B. Roberts No. 1 Higgs, in the same survey, resumed drilling after a shut down of two weeks and was past 250 feet. Fondren Production company No. 1 Cox-Manley, in the F. Sieberman survey No. 8, was underreaming eight-inch casing to 1,830 feet.

In western Shackelford, Ray & Stanforth No. 5 J. P. Vickers was spudded as a west offset to the A. R. Eppenauer No. 3 Morris. Location is 310 feet north of the No. 4, located in the northwest quarter of section 207, ETRR survey.

The Charter Oil & Gas company No. 8 N. M. Mims in the south half of the same location, was gauged this week at 202 barrels from 18 feet of Bluff Creek sand topped at 1,582 feet.

Low Railroad Fares Fixed by Commission

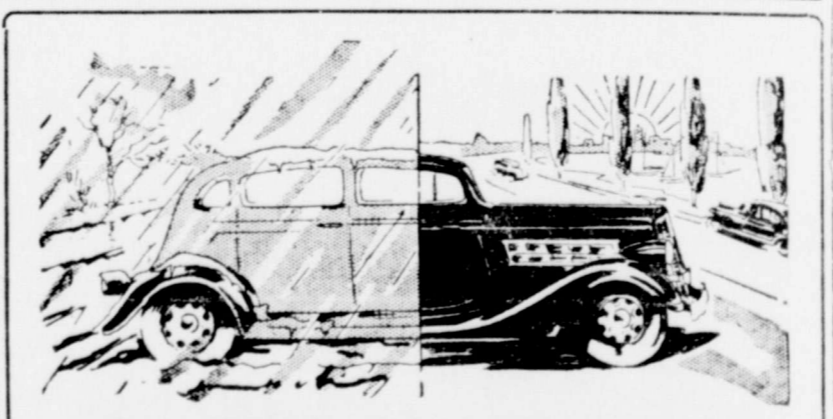

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 20 (AP)—Eastern railroads last week took their fight before the Interstate Commerce commission for an 18-month postponement of new low passenger rates. The basic two-cent-a-mile rate is effective June 2. The roads accepted the three-cent-a-mile Pullman fare fixed by the ICC.

Free Concert At New Ballard Cafe

Tonight is opening night of the New Ballard cafe and ice cream parlor, which Roy Ballard is operating, across the street from the Daniels hotel. For the formal opening Mr. Ballard has arranged a concert from 8 until 10 o'clock by the Texas Hot Shot string band. The public is invited, and are assured of a pleasant evening.

The building has recently been refitted and remodeled, as it is the purpose of the new proprietor to make the New Ballard cafe and cream parlor a favorite resort for Cisco, especially during the summer months. Dairyland Ice cream in all flavors will be handled exclusively, and be served in bulk at 10 cents per pint, or by the dish or cone. Dairyland cream comes in convenient packages to take home or on an outing.

1900 Model Schacht Two-Lunger Here On Wheezy Jaunt Across Country

Blubbering its way across the southwest on the power of two lungs, one of the strangest vehicles of the automobile age paused in Cisco for a few minutes Saturday and then backed out and tumbled on its slow journey to Dallas and the Texas centennial. At the wheel of the strange craft, a 1900 model Schacht "Runabout," bearded and sleepy, but Irish for all that, was Paul Hubbard, scenic artist and cartoonist who hails from San Jose, Cal., but originated in Bowie, Texas. Trailing behind the lumbering machine, whose engine is in the rear and antedates modern gasoline, was a canvas house mounted on a couple of motorcycle wheels.

Hubbard cranks the engine, which burns crude oil, with a handle at the rear, like twisting the tail of a bull. The two-cylinder motor develops seven-horsepower and is geared for six speeds ahead. It can attain a top speed of 15 miles per hour and it travels 35 miles on a gallon of fuel.

The long trip from San Francisco, Cal., to Dallas—a trip which a glance at the machine will convince required an uncommon temerity—is being financed by Hubbard through the sale of his drawings and paintings en route. He had little time to spend in Cisco during daylight. "I want to get somewhere," he said. "I had only a couple of hours sleep last night and I'm tired."

FDR Signs Bill To Aid Flood Sufferers

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 18 (AP)—President Roosevelt has signed a bill authorizing the Reconstruction Finance corporation to lend up to $50,000,000 for flood rehabilitation.

Commission Raises Allowable for May

AUSTIN, April 20 (AP)—The Texas Railroad commission have set Texas May oil allowable at 1,164,955 barrels daily, as compared to 1,147,690 barrels on April 1 and 1,173,677 barrels April 15.

likely see many curious and interesting exhibits pass through Cisco en route to and from the exhibitions at Dallas and Fort Worth. It should prove educational to live on a main-travelled highway such as No. One and come in contact with the character of traffic that will pass over it. Moreover, the fact that the Texas centennial celebration is drawing attention in far places is revealed in the desires of such exhibitors to bring their attractions to it. The ancient car that spluttered a weary course from San Francisco to Dallas and paused here Saturday is an example. This exhibit of marvelous carvings from Ohio is another.

GOSS IN CISCO

Howard Goss, former Cisco principal now a soil expert with the government erosion service, was in Cisco today. Mrs. Goss joined members of her family at Stamford to go to Oklahoma City for the funeral of a grandfather, he said.

Pensioner Declines Offer of Marriage

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., April 20 (AP)—Matrimony holds no interest for Jesse R. Farmer, 76, widower, who received the first state old age pension check.

A letter from a widow suggested that "we put our pension checks together and we ought to get along fine." A stamped envelope was included.

"Why should I?" Farmer answered. "I don't need a woman around at this stage of life. No, sir, I'm content to let well enough alone."

He receives $10 a month.
