TEXANS TRAIL BLAZERS, SAYS ALLRED

Car Plunges Off Viaduct At Noon Today; 2 Hurt

Through the Editor's Spectacles
By GEORGE

The crude and brutal hanging of an Apache Indian murderer by the government in Arizona is revolting to think about. That in this advanced state of civilization a group of officials should so conduct the execution of a death sentence that the victim hangs kicking and groaning for half an hour while dying a horrible death is certainly to the discredit of the government. Such a bungling job as that is enough to turn anyone against capital punishment.

If the government is going to hang people the government should employ the services of experienced executioners who would know how to construct and operate a gallows so that the death is intended to mete out should come quickly and without horror. It seems to me that the spectacle of a poor devil kicking and groaning for long minutes while he died should have prompted the officers in charge to have shot him mercifully or at least make him insensible with chloroform or ether during the time. After all, he was sentenced to die, and what matter what means is used just so the death comes sanely and without discredit to the society that inflicts it.

Members of Boy Scout Troop No. 4 have had the very dickens of a time finding a scoutmaster to accompany them to Camp Billy Gibbons this week. To date they have been unsuccessful. It is in the middle of the vacation period, and most available men are either away with their families or working overtime to fill the places of those who are away.

There seems to be less interest in scouting work than once upon a time. Perhaps this is due to the increase in business volume, for certainly it is human nature for love boys and like to be with them. Taken from that viewpoint the situation does not present seriousness. But it is unfortunate that the youngsters who wish so eagerly for a man companion and guide, have none of whom they can appeal.

If any of you men can take off the week's time that is necessary, you would be doing a splendid and fruitful work for these youngsters.

One Killed, 3 Hurt In Spain Clashes

MADRID, Spain, July 14. (AP)—One person was killed and three were wounded in a clash between guards and demonstrating laborers today.

TRAVIS CRABB DRIVING; BACK HURT IN FALL

Another Cut As Third Occupant of Auto Is Thrown Clear

Two men were injured, one perhaps seriously, and another thrown clear at noon today when a car driven by Travis Crabb, WPA worker, crashed through the railing of the Katy Viaduct and plunged to the ground below.

Crabb, the more serious injured of the two, was taken to his home, 501 East Eighth street, in an ambulance summoned to the spot.

The attending physician said this afternoon that, although Crabb appeared to have been struck at the base of the spinal column by a bridge timber, and to have suffered lacerations and bruises, he probably was not in a serious condition unless internal injuries develop later.

Third Man Unhurt

Terrill Crowder was treated for a lacerated finger and leg scratches. His clothing was badly torn. J. E. Benson was uninjured.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, July 14. (AP)—A house of congress with greatly reduced membership from the present size of the house of representatives was proposed today by Doctor F. E. Townsend, the old age pension leader.

Townsend, prior to the pension convention which is opening here tomorrow, predicted the organization as having a "working majority" in the house and a number of senators as favorable to the cause next congress.

He described the democratic and republican parties as "Un-American and undemocratic."

In place of political parties he said he would substitute a "Town hall, neighborhood group" meeting.

For Work, Not Politics

IN his address at Abilene last night, Gov. James V. Allred told his audience that the next time he calls the legislature into special session it will be for constructive work and not for politics.

THE state can pay no more pensions to no more applicants than it is now paying and still receive the federal assistance that it must have. The federal statute places the payment of pensions for the aged on the basis of need and denies the state any appropriations when it refuses to concur in the federal regulations.

WITH the payment of the pensions actually under way the claims and charges of the opposition will be considerably nullified. Meantime, with the amount of money necessary to meet this obligation now determined, the legislature can go to work with its task definitely cut out in front of it. That's simply good business.

Straw Vote Findings

IF the findings of the American Institute of Public Opinion form any criterion, the suspected uneasiness of the democratic high command over the outcome of the national election in November is justified. These findings published last Sunday reveal the startling result that Landon and Knox are favored for a greater number of the electoral votes, which decide the issue, although Roosevelt and Garner receive a greater part of the popular vote.

A short while ago the radio priest, Father Coughlin who heads the Union for Social Justice — an intriguing title — predicted that the next president of the United States would be elected by the house of representatives.

We are unused to such spectacles and it is doubtful that very many of the citizens know that the house of representatives does elect the president in the event that no candidate receives a majority in the national election. This has occurred once in American history.

THE Institute's finding reveal that Roosevelt's lead in popularity has been reduced to 52 per cent, while Landon, ahead in 21 states, has an electoral majority. This electoral majority, if realized in the national election, would defeat Roosevelt no matter if he did receive a larger popular vote than his republican rival. The Institute's poll, however, does not attempt to canvass more than a cross-section. We shall await with a considerable interest the promised poll of the Literary Digest which will canvass a section of the voters approximately as large as the number who will vote, and will, therefore, constitute a forecast of the election as accurate as it is possible to achieve at the time.

Aged Atwell Citizen, J. T. Blackwell, Remembers Capture of Cynthia Parker

By R. W. H. KENNON In company with W. D. Brecheen, the mechanical superintendent of the Cisco Daily Press, and J. E. Notgrass, whom we impressed as we passed through Nimrod Friday, we called upon another of the pioneer settlers of this part of Texas, John Thomas Blackwell, who is also a native Texan, having been born in Anderson county, near Palestine, on the Neches river, July 19, 1854. He will celebrate his 82d birthday next Sunday.

Indians scalped and killed a family in Lost Valley, north of Jacksboro, and when their neighbors found them the baby was crawling around the dead bodies, and was nursing its dead mother. The Indians killed two families on that raid, and at one home they ripped open the feather beds and scattered the feathers all over the yards.

"We later lived in Johnson county, but that section was pretty well civilized and we were not bothered by the Indians. "Leaving Jack county we moved to Parker county, and then to Coleman county, where we were not bothered by the Indians until the Civil war. Going there we camped on the Leon, and next morning we saw the signs of the Indians' camp fire about a quarter of a mile from our camp. When we went to look after our horses an old skin and bones horse was staked where one of our party, Haywood Hunter, had staked his horses, and three of his horses were missing. Haywood was a brother of Bill Hunter, who now lives in Santa Anna. But the Indians did not molest us, as they knew we were pretty well armed, and also, they were more interested in stealing the horses than they were in our scalps. They were mostly on stealing raids, and they rarely ever attacked the immigrants. But when they went on the war path, and put on their war paint, we expected trouble, and the new settlers were in danger.

"I have always played a fiddle, and can still draw a pretty neat bow across the fiddle strings. I used to play for the dances, and sometimes one of the boys would offer me a drink, but I always refused, as I never mixed my music with booze. After the party broke up I might take a drink occasionally, as I would be pretty tired, and felt that a small drink rested me up a bit."

"Babe Nursed Dead Mother "My parents moved to Jack county when I was about 10 years old, and there were plenty of the redskins there at that time. The

INTO the smelly Bowery lunchroom entered a hungry and impatient person. He took a seat. A shirt-sleeved waiter ranged up alongside him.

"Say," answered the waiter, "where do you think you are, anyhow? —the Ritz-Carlton? We ain't got no menus. Just pick out what you want, same as our other customers does, and if we got it I'll bring it to you." "But how am I going to know what you've got if it ain't wrot out on a card?" said the puzzled patron.

there was a company of soldiers stationed at Coleman Post, who killed two Indian bucks. These were dressed in the finest Indian apparel, with beaded work all over their clothes, and otherwise elaborately decorated. The soldiers cut off their heads, and the children of the settlers dragged these heads around as playthings. Coleman Post was located about 10 miles east of where the town of Coleman is now located, but there was no settlement there then.

"I was then very fond of turkey gizzards. My father killed 13 of the birds one time, and my mother cooked the gizzards of those 13 turkeys for me. I don't remember how many I ate, but right there I lost my appetite for turkey gizzards, and I have never cared for them since that day. Now, I am a firm believer in 13 being an omen of bad luck.

"There were no roads or bridges in West Texas then. Just a sort of path, or cow trail, but there were no underbrush of consequence, and we could drive most anywhere, as very little of the land was fenced. Game was plentiful, and the streams and water holes were full of fish. A cousin of mine caught a hundred pound yellow cat out of the Jim Ned creek one day. He was unable to land it alone, and my father and uncle helped to bring it out. We made our fishing lines, saddle girths and bridles out of hair from cows' tails. They were not very pretty, but nothing could break them, and the fish lines would hold any size fish.

"Grosbeck Nearest Market "Grosbeck was our nearest market. We would drive a bunch of fat steers there and trade them for what supplies we needed, and often be gone on the trip for six weeks. We had practically no coffee, but parched rye grain and burned molasses which we used as a substitute for coffee.

"Most of our clothes were made of buckskin. My father would kill the bucks and dress the hides, and we boys would rub and work these hides and make them soft and pliable, then our mother would make suits of 'clothes out of them.

"I owned my first pair of shoes when I was about 10 years old, and they were made of raw hide fine by going out and buying the whiskey from the peddler."

Mr. Blackwell is still quite a sportsman, his weakness being fishing, and he often goes down on the Jim Ned, where he spends several weeks enjoying the sport. He is also quite an expert bee hunter, and when he gets on a bee trail he generally hives the colony and brings it to his apiary, in which he now has seven colonies.

Although Mr. Blackwell did not move to Eastland county until 1898, he has lived in Coleman county and other parts of west central Texas most of his life, and is, therefore, one of the pioneers of this part of the state.

"When we lived in Johnson county prairie chickens were plentiful. We boys used to kill them with rocks. "Bob white quail came to West Texas after the Civil war. Previous to that time there were none in this part of the state. They came in at a later day. As these birds seem to have left in recent years leads me to think they belong to the migratory species. There were some blue quail, but no bob whites.

"There were no bees in this country in the early days. The first bees were introduced in Calhoun county about 40 years ago. "My father-in-law, who was one of the grand jurors of Coleman county and early court jurisprudence was a subject that many commented upon later. At times the petit juries would take exceptions at the judge's rulings, and the jury would arraign the court, and find him guilty, assessing his penalty at a fine of a quart of whiskey for the jury, and they made him pay. The saloon then was a barrel of whiskey on an ox wagon. The judge would pay the Rip Galloway, candidate for county clerk, just came around with a new type of advertising. He dropped on the desk an envelope that proclaimed the contents a "Statement of Your Account."

Dallas Wales, former manager of the Laguna hotel and president of the junior chamber of commerce, who is now manager of the Clovis hotel in Clovis, N. M., has written the following letter to Cisco friends:

"I arrived in Clovis yesterday afternoon, bringing a sandstorm with me, and the rain this morning. "Crop conditions in this part are very poor. Crops around Clovis are far superior to Clovis.

"What little I have seen of Clovis I like very much. People remind me quite a bit of Cisco in their congeniality. The town is a very busy little town, wide trades territory with some 75 miles area. The hotel does a splendid business and runs practically full the year round.

"We thought we had cool nights in Cisco. Boy, a blanket feels good here."

Lore Is to Western Rail Travelers

By The Daily Press

July 14 — Having learned that the American traveler was quite calm and settled, European travelers were frightened out of their wits by a band of whooping war bonnets bearing down on them during a short stay at the western stations.

Speedily reassured by a friendly employee and then watching the colorama presented by the Indians for the entertainment of the travelers.

European was not much surprised by the American and a great many Americans who travel almost any of the western railroads during the summer. While the American travelers are different from the folk dances, the Passion of the Christ pageantry and the medieval pageantry for tourists in Europe, the brand is just as authentic in its own fashion.

American Customs

America does have hundreds of such customs and that being carefully preserved and carried on is discovered by those who travel almost any of the western railroads during the summer. While the American travelers are different from the folk dances, the Passion of the Christ pageantry and the medieval pageantry for tourists in Europe, the brand is just as authentic in its own fashion.

Indians are anything but a "race." Census figures show the Indian population is increasing thousands in its beautiful setting at San Diego. At Yuma, in British Columbia, a Golden Jubilee is being celebrated with a flourish of interesting events, pageants, ceremonies and exhibits covering the development of the Pacific Northwest.

"FIRE FALL" STAGED

YOSEMITE, Calif. (AP)—A spectacular "fire fall" which takes place each evening of the summer here originated in an imitation of Indian smoke signals, but it goes the redmen one better. Instead of merely building a fire on a lofty cliff, the Americans push the blazing embers over the side for a drop of 3,254 feet. The custom originated in 1874.

Thousands are already flocking to the Texas centennial exposition at Dallas, which is not only a great industrial exposition but a presentation of the vivid history of the Lone Star State under the six flags which have flown over it since the days of the Spanish conquistadores. The "Cavaleade of Texas," a dramatic spectacle presented daily, pictures the days of the Indians, the coming of the Spaniards, the years under Mexican rule, the coming of the Americans and the conflict between the pioneers and Mexico, the development of the vast ranches and all the excitement which has accompanied the growth of modern Texas. At nearby Fort Worth, the days of the frontier and the growth of the "cow country" and "cow capital" are pictures in another great "Frontier Centennial."

On the Pacific coast, the California Pacific International exposition in its second year draws increasing thousands to its beautiful setting at San Diego. At Yuma, in British Columbia, a Golden Jubilee is being celebrated with a flourish of interesting events, pageants, ceremonies and exhibits covering the development of the Pacific Northwest.

For Work, Not Politics

IN his address at Abilene last night, Gov. James V. Allred told his audience that the next time he calls the legislature into special session it will be for constructive work and not for politics.

THE state can pay no more pensions to no more applicants than it is now paying and still receive the federal assistance that it must have. The federal statute places the payment of pensions for the aged on the basis of need and denies the state any appropriations when it refuses to concur in the federal regulations.

WITH the payment of the pensions actually under way the claims and charges of the opposition will be considerably nullified. Meantime, with the amount of money necessary to meet this obligation now determined, the legislature can go to work with its task definitely cut out in front of it.

Moore Quits As Ranger Coach To Take Sinton Job

RANGER, July 14.—Otis M. Moore, for the past two years head coach of the Ranger high school football and basketball teams, has tendered his resignation to take effect immediately, it was announced today by F. P. Sinton, chairman of the athletic committee of the Ranger school board, to whom the resignation was given.

No action has been taken by the school board upon the resignation, though it was believed that the board would probably meet tomorrow.

In making his resignation known Moore stated that he had signed a contract to be head coach of the Sinton high school football team, and as teacher of mathematics in the Sinton school.

Moore came to Ranger from Snyder, where he had been unusually successful as a football, basketball and track coach, and assumed his duties as head coach during the last of three phenomenal football years for the Ranger high school Bulldogs.

During the 1934 season the football team he coached won the district title without losing a game and scored a total of 185 points in district play against 21 points for the opponents of the Bulldogs.

The 1935 season, however, was not so successful for the Bulldogs, as they finished the season without a win.

CAPE TOWN, July 14 (AP).—A new type of telescope which will weigh the stars by photographing them is being installed in the royal observatory here.

Consisting of twin photometric lenses sensitive to color, it will make it possible to compute weight by a comparatively direct formula. The present method is extremely complicated.

Due to differences in color, a small star often will make a larger image on a photographic plate than one of greater magnitude. The new telescope will adjust this discrepancy.

LARGEST WELL IN BLUFF CREEK

ALBANY, July 14.—Westexas Oil & Royalty Co.—L. C. Heltzel et al No. 7, J. P. Morris, has proved to be the largest completion in the east extension of Bluff Creek pool, when drilled into he regular pay at 1600 feet, the well tested 160 barrels daily and when shot with 20 quarts of nitro-glycerin, the well flowed 45 barrels the first hour and 47 barrels the second hour on test, and settled down to strong heads flowing at 40 minute intervals, estimated good for around 600 barrels daily. The well is located center west line southwest quarter section 192, ETRY., east offset to lease held by Putnam Supply Co., Inc. of Albany, and three locations west of undeveloped acreage held by Roeser & Pendleton, Inc.

The spot around this well appears to be one of the richest in the Bluff Creek pool, which has now spread over two and one-half miles north and south and over one mile east and west, pronounced by geologists to have no definite structural geology, but lying on a large sand terrace, presumably an ancient ocean bed, sand being thrown down in a large terracing.

Nearly one hundred oil wells have been drilled within the pool area within the past 5 years, drilling having been conducted in an orderly manner, with 440 foot locations in vogue, instead of the usual 300 foot spacing, and with dozens of proved locations untouched, even offsets have been drilled slowly and a number are not being drilled for lack of market outlet.

Hix & Co. No. 1, A. J. Swenson, in center of section 206, ETRY., northwest of Bluff Creek pool, is preparing to test the sand at 1600 feet.

NEW WILDCATS IN WESTERN SHACKELFORD

ALBANY, July 14.—Grisham-Hunter Corp. No. 1, W. Y. and Merrick Davis, is a new wildcat test for western Shackelford in the center of northeast quarter section 15, block 14, T&P, drilling at 800 feet, located near the Jones-Shackelford line.

F. Craig Morton, agent, No. 1, G. R. Davis, is another wildcat test for western Shackelford, located on a 1700 acre block purchased recently by Mr. Morton. A King sand test will drill to the 1900 foot horizon in center southeast of northeast section 55, block 13, T&P. The Morton block covers portions of G. R. Davis and the Holstein estate ranches.

Messrs. Jones & Stasney of Albany have purchased leases on 1000 acre block in sections 39 and 48, block 14, T&P, immediately west of the Morton tract.

W. T. Daniels et al No. 1, J. P. Morris wildcat in center southwest section 189, ETRY., is drilling at 1400 feet, a mile in advance of Bluff Creek pool.

Charter Oil & Gas Co. No. 2, W. J. Herrington, is drilling at 1100 feet in center northwest quarter section 208, ETRY., south of the Mims-Vickers area.

MURDER TONIGHT

BY LAURENCE W. MEYNELL

SYNOPSIS: Although Lumsdale may not know it, he is to inherit 60,000 pounds from his murdered master, the miser, Arthur Burdett. Inspector Hylton feels that Lumsdale's alibi, on the day of the murder, is almost too good, but except for one comparatively unimportant detail, he cannot shake it. Now Lumsdale has volunteered to show him and Sergeant White that the mate to the club which did the murder is hanging in its rightful place, and not where it was hanging when Hylton and White inspected the room.

Chapter 18
NEW PUZZLE
"Those two clubs always did hang from that top nail," Lumsdale went on. "There used to be a plate on this bottom one, but it got broken a bit ago."

"How?" asked Hylton.
"Well, if you must know, the old fool threw it at me."

Hylton was too much interested in the queer business of the clubs to enjoy this much.

"Were the two clubs on that top nail on Monday?" he asked.
"Ah'm certain they were."

"Why didn't you tell us about this before?"

"Ah never realized it till this morning. There's folks as wouldn't think it likely, Mister, but in a rum sort of way Ah reckon I was fond of the poor old man. I never gave a thought to that other club being on its wrong nail, but this morning I suppose I was more normal like and all of a sudden I thought to meself 'Why don't it, Lumsdale, but that club's on wrong nail,' and I got a chair and put it up in its place."

All Hylton said then was, "If you've got any other bits of odd information tucked away you better give 'em to us, Lumsdale."

"Come on, Sergeant, we must be getting along." At the doorway the Inspector turned suddenly on Lumsdale and said casually, "Let's see how much is it you got under Mr. Burdett's will—the whole lot?"

Lumsdale shook his head. "The lawyer'll tell me that, Mister."

Kingsley Hylton looked at the stubborn North countryman for a moment and abruptly turned away. He was beginning to take an acute dislike to Mr. Andrew Lumsdale.

When they had left the Court about a quarter of a mile behind Hylton stopped in the road to light one of his thin black cigars. Then he said abruptly, "Do you realize, White, how extraordinary that business of the clubs is?"

"Well, it does seem a bit rum, sir."

"Rum? In a way it is one of the rummest things I've ever come across. Just think for a minute: our hypothesis is that someone, almost certainly known to Burdett, comes to the door and is admitted. Now, think, a quarrel in the middle of it, the stranger says 'excuse me one moment whilst I put this chair against the wall and get down something to hit you with.' It's hardly likely is it?"

"Praps Mr. Burdett went out of the room for a minute."

"And left someone behind with the safe open? Not likely. And anyway, supposing he did, why on earth did the man (if it was a man) get down two clubs to do a murder with?"

"We've only Lumsdale's word for where the clubs usually are, sir."

"No we haven't. When I got up on the chair to see how high that nail is I distinctly saw a slight discoloration of the paper—you know the unfaded bits behind pictures."

"Well, I can't say that I do understand it, sir."

"No more can I. In the middle of a quarrel I stand up on a chair to reach a weapon. That's odd enough, but it is just understandable."

"Having killed a man, then go to the trouble of standing on the chair again, getting down a second club which is no earthly use to me and deliberately hanging it in its wrong place. That doesn't make sense, White, to me."

"The Inspector hired a motor car from the Hoops and was back in Morechester by tea-time. He went straight to the post office where he was delighted to find that all the assistants were girls. In one respect women are supremely useful to a detective, almost unconsciously a woman takes notice of a face and remembers it."

In turn all five were brought in to the postmaster's office and there confronted by the Inspector's most charming smile and a photograph. Four failed to respond, and Hylton was beginning to lose faith in women, when Enquiries and General Delivery revived it handsomely by reacting immediately to the photograph. She recognized the man at once, Mr. Langley.

"Mr. Who?"

"Langley, I think he must be a traveling salesman or something coming through Morechester every four weeks or so, anyway he calls pretty regularly for letters."

"The devil he does? What sort of letters?"

"Well, they aren't letters really, they're more like little packages, 'where from?'"

Miss Enquiries rather over-virtuously stated that she never bothered to look where things came from.

"And did Mr. Langley come in on Monday?"

"Monday? Let me think. Well, I know he's been in once this week because there was something for him in the box. It was either Monday or Tuesday, I'm not sure which."

"Thank you Miss—er—"

"Pearson" (repressively).

"Miss Pearson" (apologetically).

The Inspector left the post office in a growing excitement of mind. He felt certain that Andrew Lumsdale had not forgotten his visit to the post office, but for some reason or other had not wanted it known.

He went back by car to Ender-ton and getting out at the Hoops walked into the Square to buy some matches in John Fenton's stores. The door was half open so that his entry was unheralded by the tell-tale ping of the old fashioned bell, and he had hardly entered the shop before he heard voices coming from the passage at the rear. Mr. and Mrs. Fenton had company evidently.

He heard general "good byes" being said and then, as an evident afterthought, a distinctly clear-ical voice said "I was sorry not to see you at the women's service on Monday, Mr. Fenton, I hope nothing was the matter."

"No, Rector, I just couldn't manage to get along for once that was all."

The customary superfluous good-byes were repeated ad nauseam and the street door shut behind the visitor, then a somewhat perturbed man's voice said "I don't understand about Monday evening, Mary, you told me you had been to church as usual."

"John, I—"

"Ping. Someone else had come in and shut the door sharply; Kingsley Hylton turned a reproachful eye on the innocent intruder and Mary Fenton, a well made woman, now past middle age and growing a little on the matronly side of buxomness, came out of the back regions.

"Yes sir?"

Hylton bought his box of matches and went out reflectively.

Outside he almost ran into the Rev. Steeble who unexpectedly stopped him and said, in a voice that the Inspector recognized, "You are Mr. Hylton, I believe."

"That's right."

"My name is Steeble, I am the Vicar of this parish."

"How d'you do, Mr. Steeble?"

"Mr. Hylton, a deed of violence has been committed, apparently a crime, and it is your duty to enquire into it. I hope no man understands the meaning of duty better than I do, but, somehow, Mr. Hylton I hardly think you will be successful in your enquiries."

Kingsley Hylton was a little taken back by this greeting.

"You don't, Mr. Steeble," he asked, why?"

The Rev. Steeble's pale blue eyes blazed up into a fanatical fury and his whole fine face became alight with a sort of holy anger; his voice was strained as he answered.

"Because of a fact which Scotland Yard for all its cleverness is apt to forget Mr. Hylton—because God will guard his own," his wild eyes stared straight into the astonished ones of the Inspector for a full half minute and then, suddenly sinking his head on to his chest, he turned and walked rapidly away.

Kingsley Hylton went slowly back to the Hoops. "What you've got to remember, K. H.," he admonished himself under his breath, "is that logic doesn't count with human beings—they're all mad, including yourself."

Dale Shipley was in the saloon of the Hoops drinking a moody pint of beer; but the young man was less dejected than he might well have been. Lawson's visit to Fielden Cottage turned out to be innocuous; the lodgekeeper had come merely to tell Dale that there was a likely looking mare for sale over at Ruckley, and thoughts of horse and hounds were running through the young man's head now.
