Band Plans Romney Trip

Through the Editor's Spectacles By GEORGE

Two United States and state department of agriculture men are working in and out of Cisco this week making an inspection of peach orchards to determine the extent of infection with what are known as Phony peach and Mosaic peach diseases, and to undertake measures for the eradication of these diseases.

These are two peach tree afflictions new to this country, I am told. The Phony peach disease was first noticed in Georgia where it is said to have done a great deal of damage to the peach industry.

The Mosaic peach disease traveled from the opposite direction, having first been noticed in the state of Colorado, Mr. Rasor told me. It was discovered first in Texas in Brown county, directly to the south of us.

Effects of both on the peach are similar. Both cause the fruit to become smaller year by year and the number of the fruit to grow less and less.

The two workers ask that those who have peach trees or orchards give them the fullest cooperation so that any appearance of the disease may be detected and the infection stamped out as quickly as possible.

From the very day of his birth the health of Elphaleet Bodwell has been a subject of much concern. Despite the fact that his parents fed him on Bellini's Food and other sure-fire aids to perfect health, he grew up middling-sized and none too good-looking.

As a result, he became very nervous and jumpy on the subject. Even when he was feeling tip-top he considered it a bad sign. One night he dreamed he was going to die of paralysis and since then he has

Large Crowd Is Urged By Jaycees Group On Goodwill Tour

First of the Lobo band goodwill trips sponsored by the junior chamber of commerce will be to Romney next Thursday it was announced by James McCracken of the junior chamber of commerce committee after a conference with band officials and citizens of Romney.

The concert has been set for 8:30 at the Romney school, McCracken said. He urged every member of the Junior chamber of commerce to make the trip, which is for the purpose of bringing about a feeling of closer friendship between the people of Cisco and those of Romney.

Band Rehearsing

The band is already preparing for the series of trips into nearby communities, having resumed rehearsals Thursday evening. New music has been secured, with the view of presenting worthwhile entertainment on the trips.

"When we went out to Romney and asked about coming there for the first trip, the citizens we talked to were anxious to have us come," McCracken said. "They promised to have a large crowd there. It is up to us to take a large delegation from Cisco as well."

McCracken emphasized the fact that the concert will be free and that everyone in Romney and nearby communities is invited to attend.

The committee announced that it hoped to make a goodwill trip into some nearby town or community each Thursday evening.

Denies Attempt At Assassination Of King Edward

LONDON, July 17. (AP)—George Andrew McMahon, whose loaded revolver menaced King Edward yesterday, said today that the weapon was not knocked from his hand but that he threw it into the street near the king.

This version was relayed by authoritative sources who said McMahon told police he never had the least intention of shooting the king. McMahon was taken to a hospital for mental observation and medical treatment.

PARIS, July 17. (AP)—The French chamber of deputies voted the nationalization of the arms industry today. The measure clamps strict government control over the nation's armament plants.

EDISON FUND DRIVE BEGINS

The drive for Cisco's contribution to the Edison Memorial Foundation began this morning as five groups of workers from the junior chamber of commerce began a canvass of the city.

Small contributions will be asked of each firm and individual. H. L. Dyer, chairman of the junior chamber of commerce committee, said. An effort will be made not to secure a few large contributions but to enable as many persons as possible to participate in the movement.

The memorial will be used for 100 fellowships annually, similar to the Rhodes scholarships. R. L. Ponsler is general chairman for Cisco.

'General Staff' To Head Drouth Relief

To provide food and clothing for families driven by drought from such farms as this abandoned acreage near Liberal, Kas., federal relief agencies are coordinated in a military-like set-up.

By HERBERT FLUMMER WASHINGTON, July 17. (AP)—Under President Roosevelt as commander-in-chief a highly trained army of federal experts moves on a united front to battle drought.

The drought relief committee or "general staff" is the central authority. Its four members formulate policies and represent the president.

Secretary Wallace speaks for the department of agriculture.

Dr. Rexford Tugwell's resettlement administration handles the bulk of actual relief work.

Williams Provides Jobs Aubrey Williams, deputy administrator of WPA, represents Administrator Harry Hopkins, who is charged with providing jobs for some 50,000 farmers ruined by the drought.

Daniel Bell, acting director of the budget, is the finance officer who digs up the money.

Chester Davis, farm member of the federal reserve board, serves as ex-officio adviser to the president and the "general staff" on arranging credit in the drought areas.

Policies formulated by the general staff are transmitted to the inter-departmental drought committee, the "division staff."

Tapp Heads "Line Officers" Jesse W. Tapp, assistant administrator of AAA, is chairman or senior "line officer." Tall, broad-shouldered and erect, he is in charge of crop surplus removal and the federal surplus commodities corporation.

Dr. A. G. Black, chief of the bureau of agricultural economics, came to the department of agriculture in 1933 as chief of the corn-hog section of AAA on indefinite leave from Iowa State College.

Lawrence Westbrook, broad-shouldered, with thinning black hair and a dynamic personality, is called one of the most valuable "line officers" in the present crisis because of his familiarity with resettlement work in Texas.

C. W. Warburton, director of the extension service of the department of agriculture, has been connected with the depart-

ENDORSEMENT OUT OF ORDER SAYS LEADER

Roosevelt, Landon To Remain Away From The Convention

CLEVELAND, Ohio, July 17. (AP)—Frank Arbuckle, permanent chairman of the Townsend national convention, announced to the cheering delegation today that any motion or resolution having to do with the endorsement of any national political party "shall be out of order at all times." He added this decision represented the unanimous view of the board of directors.

Ordinarily demonstrative the delegates received in silence the reading of a telegram from Governor Alf Landon, the republican presidential candidate, declining an invitation to address the convention.

President Won't Attend President Roosevelt also sent a message stating that he would be unable to appear.

Meanwhile the delegates pondered the Townsend demand that Gomer Smith, who failed recently to qualify in the Oklahoma democratic primary run-off, be replaced as vice president and a member of the board of directors.

'SECESSION' THREATENED IF SMITH REMOVED

OKLAHOMA CITY, July 17. (AP)—J. F. Highswander, sixth district director of the Oklahoma Townsend clubs, declared today that state clubs should "secede" the national convention if the organization acceded to Townsend's demand that Gomer Smith be removed.

McDonald Flays His Opponent In Arlington Talk

ARLINGTON, July 16.—The charge that the state land office had taken a slice of rich oil land away from a farmer even after he had complied with land office instructions was hurled here today by William H. McDonald of Eastland county, candidate for state land commissioner.

"Let my opponent, the land office chief clerk, defend that deal if he wishes to do so," McDonald challenged.

"I want to tell you about an old farmer who had a little place in East Texas. He cleared the fields and built a little cabin surrounded by the tall pines. There he and his family lived happily for years. The boys and girls grew up and moved away, and then oil was found not far off. The old man learned that there was some question about the title to approximately 10 acres of the little farm that he had improved and lived on for all these years.

"So the land office was consulted and he was advised to file one application to buy the tract in question and file another application to lease. He did so. Not long after that, some individuals took charge of the tract and began to build derricks. When he made inquiry, the comforting news was given him that, when he carried out instructions, his application to buy was cancelled by his application to lease and that some other parties had made a better lease offer than he did.

"A fortune was made from the oil under the land but the old farmer did not share in it. Understand, too, that the school fund would have received its royalty just the same if he had obtained the tract as it did under the new possessors."

Lemke Asks Mexico To Pay for Cattle

(By Associated Press)
Congressman Lemke of North Dakota, Union party candidate for President, has a claim against the Mexican government that has been hanging fire since 1912.

Back in 1907, the ex-ranger rider went to Mexico to manage a ranch and herd cattle for a group of Dakota business men. For nearly five years the ranch prospered.

Came revolution and early one morning a swarthy fellow named General Obregon arrived at the ranch with an army. He demanded a little beef—something to feed the men, he told Lemke—and calmly commanded 1,000 head of cattle.

"I didn't blame him," Lemke draws now. "It was war, and he was a great fellow. I like him."

The Sportsman

By LARRY BAUER

One of the steadiest streams of immigration into the United States is encouraged by game experts who are constantly seeking to build up America's wild fowl supply. To this end, game birds from overseas are continually brought in with the hope that they will take the place of great native American flocks already entirely extinct or shrinking in numbers.

First of the foreigners to be introduced were pheasants. These birds have thrived and are rather abundant in almost every northern state from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Of the several species, most common are the Chinese, or ring-neck. These have interbred with the English pheasant.

Next came the Hungarian partridge. Several states tried producing these cocky birds for restocking. Some were successful; others abandoned the experiment. Numbers of Hungarians have been raised in backyard pens by sportsmen for liberation on their favorite hunting grounds. They are doing remarkably well in parts of Canada, notably in Manitoba.

Thousands of Mexican quail from the southwest were shipped into central and eastern states when the native bob-white decreased in alarming numbers. The chief difference between "Old Bob" and the newcomers is the fancy legwork of the latter. As one tired hunter remarked: "They keep to the ground and run like jackrabbits. My dogs are all worn out." Interbreeding eliminates some of their running qualities.

Now comes the Chukor partridge from Asia. At least two states, California and Georgia, are breeding this bird. Brood stock in California game farms totals about 1,400 fowl. There has been no open season for sportsmen to determine the Chukor's game qualities, but it is as fast on the wing as the valley quail, and larger.

Chukor a Champion
Georgia game officials are enthusiastic about this plucky alien. Purser Collins of the Georgia game and fish department says the Chukor should make an ideal bird for American forests and fields, adding: "The bird lays for the dog."

Paderewski Turns to Films As Star in Forthcoming Picture

By ELMER W. PETERSON (Associated Press, Foreign Staff) LONDON, July 17. (AP)—At the age of 75 Ignace Jan Paderewski is taking his piano into the heat and glare of the motion picture studio.

For the first time in his long career the famous pianist and Polish patriot has signed to appear in a film. He has been engaged by Lothar Mendes, American director now heading his own British production company, for the lead role in a film temporarily titled "Moonlight Sonata."

Work on the picture will start in July with Mendes himself in the director's chair. "Paderewski of course will have the role of a musician," explains the vigorous hard-working Mendes. "But it will be a role as only Paderewski can play it; no velvet-jacketed product of the make-up artist."

Continuity To Fit Music "Nor will the film be merely the means of permitting Paderewski to play his piano from start to finish. The story permits an honest portrayal of the effect of a great musician on the lives of several other people."

"It was the story in fact which had much to do with persuading Paderewski to come to the films. His music will be there but it will at all times be purposeful."

Film people here are confident that Paderewski, with his striking appearance, the amazing head and deepest kindly eyes, will have his personality enhanced by the films. His age is not regarded as a drawback and no film tests were made.

Pianist's Motive Mystery "He is as alive, as vital, as ever," said Mendes after meeting the musician in Paris and signing the contracts. "He is accepting a new medium of expression with extraordinary interest, insisting on being informed as to every detail."

Why Paderewski, who has made many fortunes—and given them away—should emerge from his Switzerland retreat to enter motion pictures is something of a mystery. That he is to receive a tidy sum is taken for granted, but there are neither hints nor rumors of any undue need of money.

NO SELF STARTER STERLING, Okla. (AP)—J. T. Fryman, farmer, did away with motor trouble with his new one-mule power auto. He hitches a mule to his old model car.

The state of Sao Paulo, Brazil, produced $151,000,000 worth of farm products in 1935, including coffee, cotton, corn, rice, fruits, sugar, beans, potatoes, mandiocca and tobacco.

Geology Classes Get Actual Work At Summer Camp

(Special to The Daily Press) AUSTIN, July 17.—The principle of allowing the student to practice his profession under supervision, and under as nearly as possible actual conditions, before he is given his degree and permitted to enter his chosen field of work as a trained member is favored by modern education. The University of Texas geology department each year sends out a selected field crew to live in summer camp for six to twelve weeks, learning how to use geological instruments and becoming acquainted with the actual work of being a geologist.

This summer a corps of 30 graduate and senior students has been sent to Brady, together with four members of the geology faculty: Dr. Fred M. Bullard, Dr. Robert Cuyler, G. R. McNutt and Surce Taylor. The students will make geological surveys in McCulloch county, which has been the site of the geology camp for several years. This county is on the north-west flank of an uplift known as the central mineral region, or the Llano mountains, and from a geologic standpoint this area is one of the most interesting in the whole southwest, Dr. Bullard said.

The center of the uplift contains large areas of intrusive granites, a thick succession of pre-Cambrian gneisses and schists, and a good sedimentary record of the Cambrian and Ordovician. The Silurian and Devonian are absent, Dr. Bullard stated, with the Mississippian represented in isolated patches. Forming a rim around the uplift is a thick series of Pennsylvanian and Permian rocks. During the Mesozoic the region was deeply eroded, and the Cretaceous cover from the central mineral region, leaving only isolated remnants which are locally known as Brady mountains or Blue mountains.

There are numerous mineral localities in the central mineral region, including the famous Baringer Hill Pegmatite with its rare minerals. Other minerals found in this region include the ores of copper, lead, zinc, manganese, silver, iron, graphite, steatite and others.

East Weber, Utah, once a town of 5,000 persons, has shrunk to 300 and is now known as Uintah. Change in freight routes shifted business and population to Ogden.

BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, thy God reigneth.—Isa. 52: 7.

When He had conquered death and grave, Appearing to men's view The same Lord who was crucified, Whom the disciples knew, These loving words He spoke to them: Let peace be unto you. —BENNETT.

To be at one with God is to be at peace. The child's simplicity is the great agency in bringing that full and complete realization; the child's simplicity that recognizes its true relation with the Father's love.—Trine.

Service to Visitors

THE Texas Highway commission is performing a distinct service to tourists entering the state and to the citizens of Texas, themselves, by maintaining at all principal points of highway entry attractive information houses attended by courteous young men. These information houses, staffed by A. and M. college cadets, are located at Orange, Joaquin, Marshall, Texarkana, Paris, Denison, Gainesville, Wichita Falls, Tuxedo, Farwell, Pecos, El Paso and Milam. Tourists may drive up to one of these attractive houses, and receive almost any information about Texas they wish. They will be supplied with maps of routes, literature of various places they may wish to visit, highway information, information about the various centennial celebrations, about economic conditions, history and so forth.

THE personnel of the staffs of these information houses was hand-picked by J. B. Early, chief of the maintenance division of the department under which division supervision of the new service was placed.

TOURISTS into Texas appreciate this free service a great deal, as recent reports show. Moreover, it will give the state a fairly accurate check on the number of out of state cars which come to Texas and the number of tourists who are drawn here by the publicity given the centennial celebrations.

Two Dissenting Facts

COMM'R LON A. SMITH'S public denunciation policies of the state railroad commission majority yesterday is noteworthy for two reasons which have the effect of denying the charges which the dissenting member made.

FIRST, the commissioner, assertedly championing the welfare of the independent operators, said nothing of the interests of the independents outside the east Texas flush field.

SECOND, the commission majority was spontaneously defended by the independents and by the entire audience of oil operators before whom the charges were read.

THESE facts quite nullify the accusations of discrimination between areas and against the interests of the small producers. It is also significant that the charges were made at a time when improving conditions in the oil industry are placing the business on a profit-making basis, a result which is alone sufficient to justify the means. It is a well-known fact, demonstrated by bitter experience, that without some effective method of prorating the flush wells of the east Texas field, the thousands of marginal wells of west Texas and other well developed areas cannot produce oil profitably. One may well ask whether or not it is better to permit the independents of the east Texas area, where lifting costs are negligible, to flood the market with oil and force the closing in or selling out of the properties of thousands of independents elsewhere, or whether a just and reasonable prorating program should be enforced to the end that west Texas, south Texas, north Texas and central Texas independents may exist and the best conservation of the oil and gas resources be attained.

mature claims of their leaders seriously at all, wouldn't the result be over-confidence, leading to a slackening of effort?

Conversely, it may be disputed whether such claims damage the political opposition. Certainly there have been cases where the reverse was true—where too much arrogance on one side has angered and stimulated the other side, and has aroused a more desperate resistance.

So far as the bandwagon is concerned, the strength of its pull in national elections nowadays is open to serious question. Each reader can calculate for himself how many voters there are among his personal acquaintances who will be impelled on election day entirely by a desire to be on the winning side.

Such a desire may be a strong factor in some local situations, but it is difficult to visualize it, on practical terms, as turning the tide far or against any national ticket.

Conditions Prevent Forecast

In the campaign of 1936 all sorts of cross-currents are at work. It would be a miracle if, four months before the election, anyone could assess accurately the relative strength of these many factors. Involved in President Roosevelt's candidacy for reelection there are certain fixed quantities. He has a record, known to the country, and he must stand on that record. Still even about him there remains the cloak of a continuing speculation as to what new policies, if any, he will project into the campaign.

In large measure, Governor Landon still has to make the acquaintance of the American people. He is destined to be much better known, and to make a far more definite impression one way or the other, before election day. The strength of the right-wing democratic deflection led by Al Smith and others still is to be measured. The independent movement headed by the Lemke-Coughlin coalition has not yet perfected its organization or projected its campaign plans.

And all of this, in the midst of changing currents of depression

Laughing Around the World

With IRVIN S. COBB

A Two Part Serial

By IRVIN S. COBB

THIS story naturally resolves itself into two parts. Thus:

Part 1 Two midgets, members of a traveling troupe, are waiting at the Atlanta station for a train to New Orleans. The train is due at midnight but it is late. The dwarfs go into the lunch room for a bite. One of them drinks two large cups of black coffee, then immediately begins to lament his indiscretion.

"I had no business doing that," he pipes to his companion. "Now I know I won't sleep a wink till broad daylight."

The train arrives and the little men get on. The coffee drinker has a sleeper ticket calling for Upper Eleven. The other little man holds a reservation for Upper Twelve.

The porter hustles the diminutive passengers into their respective berths and the train moves on.

Part 2 On the following morning two traveling men meet in the washroom of the Pullman.

"Hello, old chap," says the first. "I didn't know you were aboard. What space did you have last night?"

"I was in Lower Eleven," says the second man.

"How did you rest?" asks number one.

"Rotten! I guess it must have been a fancy, but I had the feeling that all night long somebody was walking up and down just over my head."

Frankly Speaking

By FRANK LANGSTON

Two candidates are scheduled to speak in Cisco Saturday afternoon; they have advised The Press: Cecil A. Lotief, candidate for reelection to the state legislature, will speak at the city hall lawn at 3 o'clock, and Harry Tom King, candidate for the state senate, will speak on the street at 5 p. m.

Thomas L. Blanton will speak on the city hall lawn Monday evening. A group of Ciscoans is at work to secure as large a crowd for the address as possible.

Desdemona will be the site of the county candidates' rally tonight. Tomorrow afternoon the candidates will move over to Carbon. They will hold their rally in Cisco at 8:30 Wednesday evening, will go to Ranger the following night, and will end their campaigning with a rally on the courthouse lawn at Eastland Friday night of next week.

Yesterday afternoon this column listed to a recital of the fact that Ciscoans know very little about Lake Cisco and the big dam that impounds it.

I wonder, for instance, just how many persons could tell off-hand how many miles of shore line the lake has? Or who built the dam? Or a lot of other things?

Human and Other Nature

By W. F. BRUCE

The statement of J. T. Blackwell in his interview with The Judge as published in The Daily Press of July 14 that he had never lost the judges' decision in any old fiddlers' contest except once through chivalry and once through sympathy toward other contestants is a little commentary on life.

A great many judgments are warped by one emotion or another so that an honest to goodness rating of one's standing is rare. This criticism does not apply alone to officially appointed judges either. Our views on a lot of things are all awry. When we come to express ourselves politically inherited prejudices, selfish interests, spite, and a dozen other considerations (which are really lacks of consideration) may enter in. Religiously we are influenced by the sentiment we have about father's and mother's beliefs, by the regard we have for certain friends, and other equally minor motives.

On the other hand, why not? Since we are emotionally constituted how can decisions of our judgments be wholly intellectual? It would seem that a complete opinion about anything would have to have a coloring of feeling. If I have a reaction of rejoicing at giving a student a grade and a reaction of regret at giving him or another student some other grade may this feeling not have entered into the estimation of the value of his achievement in the first place? And if it did how much of that emotion is objectionable? So with our decisions every day on small matters or important, we are affected by the way we feel about them, and we feel somewhat

POLITICS at Random

By BYRON PRICE

Editor of Random, The Associated Press, Washington

Long before the nation-wide campaign gets well under way, the prognosticators are busy informing the public who will win. It is possible to read daily that Chairman Whoot has announced the glorious and overwhelming triumph of his candidate, or that Senator Whastat has conducted a survey and finds his state safe for the ticket beyond the preadventure of a doubt.

Some political managers even are hauling out the adding machines, and counting with great exactitude the chickens from eggs not yet laid.

The reasons for this strange performance are something of a mystery. Perhaps the best explanation is that the practice of long-range political forecasting persists because no one has stopped to consider how foolish most of it appears under present-day conditions.

In by-gone times, there probably was a psychological advantage in claiming everything in sight. On many occasions, too, it probably was possible to get a rather definite line on the result, well in advance.

It is a disputed point how far either of these possibilities applies in these days of rapidly changing public opinion and widespread independent voting.

Damage Of Over-Confidence

The theory of the extravagant political claim is, of course, that it helps the morale of party workers, throws fear into the ranks of the enemy and encourages doubters to leap for the bandwagon. But does it?

MURDER TONIGHT

BY LAURENCE W. MEYNELL

SYNOPSIS: It may very well be Lumsdale, old Arthur Burdett's manservant, who killed the old miser. But now, after a little conversation with Dale Shipley's housekeeper while Dale is riding with the hunt, Inspector Hylton is inclined to think it may have been Dale. The truth is that almost anybody in Hope Enderton might have done it, and might have had reason to do it. Now Hylton is talking to the Reeves' maid, and what he hears of Shipley's lateness at their dinner on the night of the murder seems suspicious.

Chapter 21 NEW CLUE

"... Mr. Shipley he didn't come for another five minutes, and Cook and me nearly busting ourselves trying to keep the soup hot."

"I suppose when he did turn up Mr. Shipley looked as though he'd hurried a bit?"

"The maid considered. 'Praps he did look a bit put out,' she said finally, and the Inspector, watching her closely, snook his head; so far she had been in the realm of aggrieved fact and was reliable; his last question had opened up vistas of being able to establish connection with village-shaking business up at the Court. Hylton knew from bitter experience of her sort what fantastic realms of sheer invention she would be capable of embarking on with only the slightest encouragement.

He decided to leave well alone and withdrew. He turned out of the drive and had not gone very far down the road when he met Mrs. Reeves walking her horse slowly to home. She smiled pleasantly at him.

"Had a spill?" he asked.
"No. Coconut overreached badly and I had to bring him back. Sickening wasn't it? They're having one of the best runs ever. What happened to you?"

"It was too hot for me," Hylton laughed. "I just had to drop out."

She nodded and smiled again in her attractive way and they parted. Hylton kicked his old horse into a trot and went back to the Hoops. Sergeant White was waiting for him there. Presently—the worthy old hack being disposed of—they were closeted together in Hylton's private sitting room.

"Get anything to tell me?" Hylton asked.

"Yes sir, I have got something, though I don't know whether it means anything or not."

"Just one minute, Sergeant. Walk over to that door behind you and poke your head into the billiard room, will you?"

White did as he was bid. "Nobody there, sir," he said a trifle surprised.

"Good. People who play billiards sometimes have long ears. Go ahead."

"It's this sir." The Sergeant produced a small square of yellow cardboard from his pocket and put it carefully on the table. "Edwards found it. He's our man on the back door at the Court. He was going off duty the other day and took a short cut across the bit of grass in front of the window—"

"The window of the room where it happened?"

"Yes sir. A few yards away from the window he saw this and picked it up."

Hylton very gingerly took up the exhibit and studied it. The cardboard had been folded in half down the middle and had lost something of its pristine freshness, but all the printing on it was still perfectly legible.

Appointment Card

Time, 2.30 Monday Jan. 18th

Telephone Morchester 61.

Please bring this card with you.

"2.30 Monday Jan. 18th," he said reflectively. "Go to the telephone just outside, Sergeant, ring up Morchester 61 and ask who it was who booked an appointment for 2.30 last Monday."

"Right-o sir."

Hylton drew out one of his thin black cigars and lit it carefully. A woman in the case? He wondered.

"Did you get them?"

"Yes sir; they were quite forthcoming about it, told me straight out."

"And who was it?"

"Mrs. Reeves of Ferney House sir."

The Inspector took the cigar out of his mouth and gave a long, low whistle.

"Mrs. Reeves, eh?" he said.

"Wife of Captain Reeves—there seems to be a devil of a lot in this business we haven't begun to get hold of yet, White."

The Inspector left the Hoops quickly and was over at Enderton Court as fast as his long legs could take him; he had decided to have a few plain words with Andrew Lumsdale before going on to see Mrs. Reeves.

He found Lumsdale in the kitchen, sitting down to a generous high tea and reading the paper.

"Afternoon Lumsdale."

"How do."

Lumsdale slowly masticated his last mouthful of food and eyed his visitor in silent and defensive speculation.

"Now let me see," the Inspector went on briskly. "Last Monday, when you went in by bus to Morchester you went straight from the bus to the cinema didn't you?"

"That's it."

"Without calling anywhere en route?"

"Ah went straight to pictures."

Hylton leaned back and said quite pleasantly, "You may not like to be told so, Lumsdale, but you're a liar. You went straight from the bus to the post office, didn't you?"

The brooding blank eyes looked at him steadily, the lantern jaws moved steadily, but the man said nothing.

"You went to the post office, didn't you, Lumsdale?"

"Ah might have gone to get a few stamps, ah forget."

"True you might have gone to get some stamps, and if that were all you might have forgotten about it. But it wasn't all, and you haven't forgotten. You went in to get something from the general delivery where you are known by the name of Langley—that's so, isn't it?"

Lumsdale said nothing, but his steady stare was not quite so aggressively confident.

"And what's more, in the name of Langley, you have been in the habit of getting small packages every month or so for a goodish time, haven't you?"

"Well, suppose I have, what of it?"

Hylton leaned back and laughed softly. "You don't know as much as you think you do, Lumsdale, that's the trouble with your type," he said.

"Apparently you don't know that it's illegal to have a general delivery address in the same town as your ordinary postal address."

"Ah'm no lawyer."

"If you were you wouldn't be such a damned fool, Lumsdale. You're in danger, and apparently you don't realize it. You stood to benefit very considerably by Arthur Burdett's death; you knew his habits; you knew every detail about the house. We've only got your word for it, mind, that Arthur Burdett wasn't alive when you came back on Monday evening and dead when you went out to find the Sergeant."

"My word's as good as any man's."

"Is it? When I look into what you tell me you were doing on Monday the first thing I find is a lie. Many a man has been arrested and held on less suspicion than that, Andrew Lumsdale."

"What do you want me to do?"

"It isn't what I want, my friend, it's what the law demands. The law will find out who killed Arthur Burdett if it takes a year to do it. If you don't want to be arrested on suspicion this afternoon, you better tell me now what all this post office business means and what was in those packages."

Andrew Lumsdale was silent for a full minute, and when he spoke it was in a very different tone of voice from the surly defensiveness he had used so far.

"Look here, Mister," he said. "I didn't kill Arthur Burdett. I know as things look a bit black against me; I realize that from the start, but I never did it. In a way you may almost say I was fond of the old fool. All the same I don't see why I should get into trouble for something as wasn't on my plate as you may say, and that's why I kept quiet about the post office business."

"Very few people have got into trouble by telling the police the truth," the Inspector said drily.

"All right then," Lumsdale drew a key from his trouser pocket, crossed the kitchen and unlocked a drawer in the old-fashioned dresser. He rummaged about with both hands for half a minute and eventually brought out a collection of photographic postcards and then he threw down in a heap on the table in front of the Inspector.

"That's what came in the packages," he said.

Kingsley Hylton picked up half a dozen of the photographs and studied them slowly, a curious conflict in his mind. Principally he was thinking how true it is that with human nature you never can tell what will happen.
