BIG RAINS SEND RIVERS ON RAMPAGE

Through the Editor's Spectacles By GEORGE

The proposed new spacing rule for oil well drilling in Texas is an issue of serious concern to the oil operators of this area...

The proposed new rule would change the requirements for spacing wells from 330 feet between two wells to 660 feet between two wells, etc.

In a reminder dropped during a recent discussion of the question, Col. E. O. Thompson, chairman of the commission, suggested the basis on which opponents of this change should and can successfully prevent its adoption.

It is quite easy to see why an increase in spacing rules to limit a well to 40 acres or more would benefit the holders of large blocks of proven oil lands by materially reducing drilling costs in the first place and prolonging the production period under a stabilized system at low costs.

In some areas, such a spacing rule would conceivably be beneficial and in those areas, perhaps, it should be adopted.

Weather EAST TEXAS Mostly cloudy, showers tonight. WEST TEXAS Partly cloudy in southwest, probably showers in east and north portions. Rain today, .8 inch. Rain for month, .8 inch. Rain for year, 14.8 inches.

Reduce Term For Eastland Convict

EASTLAND, Sept. 15.—Governor James V. Allred has announced a 90-day reduction of sentence for Danny Leach, convicted and sentenced to 15 years in the penitentiary from Eastland county upon a charge of murdering R. C. Hill April 2, 1930.

Leach, serving a 40-year sentence because of the Eastland county conviction and others in Tom Green and Newton counties, conducted himself in an exemplary manner in a prison break on July 19, 1936, which resulted in the death of a guard, Felix Smith. The governor said Leach could have escaped with others but chose to remain with a squad of 19 and offer aid to a remaining guard.

Norwegian Steamer Sends Out SOS Call

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Sept. 15. (AP)—The Norwegian steamship Torvanger radioed nearby vessels today that the hurricane-bred seas had smashed its rudder, tumbling water into its hold 500 miles north of Puerto Rico.

LONG DROUTH IS BROKEN BY TEXAS RAINS

15-Inch Downpour At Cristoval Causes Streams to Rise

Torrential rains swept over a large section of Texas last night and today, ending the drouth which has plagued Texas during the summer months.

Deluges at San Angelo and Rock Springs of nearly 12 inches sent the Concho and Nueces rivers on rampages. High water blocked highways and caused the cancelling of rail schedules.

Christoval reported 15 inches of rain and Kerrville more than six. Heavy rains were reported at Comfort, Austin, Port Arthur, Llano, and Eastland.

NEARLY INCH OF RAIN FALLS HERE TODAY

Nearly an inch of rain fell in Cisco last night and early this morning. The city hail rain gauge at noon showed a total of .8 inch. The rain, which appeared to be general over this section of the state, materially aided farmers and ranchers who were facing a drouth crisis, but came too late to save much of this year's crop.

Jap Sailors And Chinese Soldiers Clash at Pakhoi

SHANGHAI, Sept. 15. (AP)—Japanese sailors, who sought to force the landing at Pakhoi of Tokyo investigators into the death of a Japanese national, today clashed with Chinese soldiers after six Japanese fighting ships assembled off the north coast of Hainan island where they were sent by the government to "protect Japanese interests in South China."

The Japanese national was reported stabbed September 3 by Chinese at his home. Japanese navy officials said they would be forced to act unless the Chinese subdued their rebellious countrymen at Pakhoi.

Norwegian Steamer Sends Out SOS Call

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Sept. 15. (AP)—The Norwegian steamship Torvanger radioed nearby vessels today that the hurricane-bred seas had smashed its rudder, tumbling water into its hold 500 miles north of Puerto Rico. Another steamer is going to the aid of the damaged ship.

"Barometers May Be Wrong"

"As Maine goes, so goes the nation," has been an accepted political tradition in national election years. If that is true, the barometric reading is decidedly against Mr. Roosevelt this year. Moreover, the first returns from the Literary Digest poll give Landon a two-to-one lead over his democratic opponent. But there are some strange and, perhaps, delusive conditions affecting the political picture this year. New and potent influences have come athwart the traditional delineations of political America. Upon these new influences rests the decision. In our section of the country it is conceded that Roosevelt will win. This certitude is arrived at because of the attitude of the dominant majority and the democratic principle that one good term deserves another. In republican strongholds the prevailing sentiment may produce an opposite conclusion. Big business, always predominantly republican in sympathy, is throwing all its power and influence against the return of the present administration. Its stand has been bolder, its opposition the more outspoken. The result has been that in spite of a strong undercurrent of Roosevelt strength, the more articulate opposition is breeding an uncertainty of the outcome in the public mind.

It has been suggested with good basis in observation that the element of democratic strength which will determine the outcome in favor of Roosevelt's re-election is not heard and does not vote in the Literary Digest polls. Moreover, it is pointed out with some significance that the early returns in the poll four years ago gave Hoover a substantial majority over Roosevelt. The American Institute of Public Opinion, moreover, records continuing gains for Roosevelt.

The "silent" element is that made up of relief clients and others aided by the Roosevelt program of relief and rehabilitation. It is a great group of people whose welfare is directly involved in the social security program that is being worked out by the national administration in cooperation with the states. This great body of people are not going to knowingly throw overboard their hope for security against the infirmities of old age or the dangers of unemployment, no matter how nebulous at first the prospect for security may appear. And that group, counting millions of voters who constitute a potential field of social revolt against the prevailing economic system unless some method of solving their problems of economic security is provided, form a positive factor in the forthcoming election that cannot be overlooked.

Drouth Changes Plan For Poultry Exhibit

DALLAS, Sept. 15. (Spl.)—Due to drouth conditions having dealt a hard blow to young poultry in producing centers the Texas centennial exhibition's young bird show has been expanded to include old birds, Walter Burton, exposition poultry director, said today.

The drouth, according to Director Burton, retarded the growth of young birds and at the suggestion of breeders the rules have been changed to permit the inclusion of old birds.

Frankly Speaking

By FRANK LANGSTON The slow rain falling today will materially help this part of the state, although much of the drouth damage is already done.

Farmers who have needed rain for many weeks will profit somewhat, although the peanut crop already has suffered the full extent of the drouth. But the rain will help the fall crops and will do much for the stockmen of the region in providing pasturage.

Eastland county has been hard hit by the drouth, with much of the stock in poor condition in recent weeks as a result of poor grazing. The county has asked for federal drouth relief, and although this rain somewhat late, it may go a long way to cut down the emergency drouth aid.

At the same time, the rain will be a boon to business. The man on the street has remarked, "Whew, it's hot. I wish it would rain." Then he has gone about his business. There has been little or no fall buying, although the merchants had looked for a good season. This should provide a business stimulant.

Yesterday Pope Pius XI gave his blessing to military defenses against communism in Spain and other countries. This morning Adolf Hitler, dictator of Nazi Germany, shouted the warning that Bolshevism in Europe will plunge the continent "into a sea of blood."

Apparently Europe is lining up for a struggle between communism and fascism. Britain and America can well wonder, in such a struggle, what of democracy?

THE WORLD WITH A FENCE

A New Novel by Marian Sims

SUMMARY: Carol Torrance was waiting away from one love affair when she took her job in Blake's advertising office in Atkinson. But she did not escape love, for she realizes that what she feels for Blake is far deeper than mere beautiful than what she felt for Denis Ford. But there is a complication—Blake's older and more beautiful wife, Irma, will certainly give her husband a divorce. Neither is quite sure what will do right now they are at a crossroads, which seems unimportant at the moment.

"For nothing," she protested. "Goodnight, Harry." Blake said anxiously as she turned against his shoulder: "You don't have to come tomorrow if you don't feel like it."

"Of course I feel like it. There's nothing I can do unless he—gets worse."

"He won't." Nothing so tragic could happen, Blake felt, in a world as golden as this one. "Now come on and sit down a minute, then I'll go and leave you in peace."

She said with deadly seriousness: "I don't believe I'd ever be entirely at peace while you were away."

His face glowed. "My darling! That's the loveliest thing you could possibly say."

They went back, during the next hour, to the early months of their acquaintance, recalling foolish, disjointed things that had suddenly taken on a tremendous significance.

At ten o'clock he stood up reluctantly. "I said an hour ago that I'd go home. You'll—go, straight to bed?"

"Yes." His concern was like a fleecy blanket around her.

He said eagerly: "Can I stop for you in the morning?"

One of them, she thought, must cling to common sense. "Darling, you'd better not. It will be hard enough to hide it in the office without inviting suspicion."

"I guess you're right." He grinned the endearing, small-boy grin. "I'll snarl at you before the whole force if you ask it!"

She laughed. "You needn't go that far. For a lamb like you that would be equally suspicious."

He kissed her hungrily and finally let her go. "Goodnight. Oh, dear God, I love you so..."

He turned and left quickly, for fear he should be unable to leave at all.

Her first waking thought was Blake; her second Marge and Harry. But little Hal was better; he had to be. She lay for a moment with her face hidden, tasting the sweetness of last night; remembering how Blake had looked and felt.

The phone rang and she ran to answer it. Harry's voice said: "Carol!" and plunged into his message. "He's better; his pulse and his temperature are down. The doctor says he ought to pull through..."

She swallowed hard. "Oh, Harry, I'm so glad. I knew he would..." Her voice was shaking, so she added quickly: "I'll stop by the hospital this afternoon, tell Marge..." She hung up the receiver and...

She put them away while she dialed Marge's number, knowing as if by instinct where they were. Poor fool that Irma was, she thought, to have trampled unfeeling such a capacity for tenacity and care.

"Harry?" she said eagerly. It came back upon her now: all the rush and dread and waiting.

"Yes, that Carol?" Harry's voice sounded as if he had run all day.

"Yes, is there—any news?"

"No. Just about the same..."

"But he's no worse?"

"No, thank God I've just come from there and they say we ought to know—something—by tonight."

"Will you call me then—either here or at the office? I don't want to bother you."

"Right." Harry was trying hard. "Thanks, Carol, for every..."

Chapter 36
FROM BLAKE

and you ordered a piffling dinner of sliced chicken and iced coffee.

Blake would never have believed until tonight, that so small and unimportant a detail had lain all these months in his memory. Had he wondered, been falling in love with Carol even then?

But I didn't get by with it... Other nonsense, all of it. Non-sense so uncharacteristic of them that they clung to it desperately, fearing the days ahead when they would be too beset for lightness.

And after dinner: "What now? Other movie?"

She knew his thoughts. I can't you and hold you there, they let me take you home where you can be alone with you.

"I'd fall asleep, I'm afraid."

"I hoped you'd say that. I won't be long; you must go to bed..."

Broken sentences that said only their thoughts. She sat close to him in the car and remembered the night when she had shrunk to the touch of his shoulder. I lost all shame, she wondered, and knew that shame had no place in a feeling as big as this.

Inside the apartment they came together as soon as the door had closed behind them. She slipped her arms beneath his topcoat in order to be closer to him, and fought with passionate tenderness, he's so terribly thin! If only I could take care of him—now.

She drew away finally and snapped a light. "I must call Marge to see how little Harry is."

"Yes. Let me have your hat and..."

She put them away while she dialed Marge's number, knowing as if by instinct where they were. Poor fool that Irma was, she thought, to have trampled unfeeling such a capacity for tenacity and care.

"Harry?" she said eagerly. It came back upon her now: all the rush and dread and waiting.

"Yes, that Carol?" Harry's voice sounded as if he had run all day.

"Yes, is there—any news?"

"No. Just about the same..."

"But he's no worse?"

"No, thank God I've just come from there and they say we ought to know—something—by tonight."

"Will you call me then—either here or at the office? I don't want to bother you."

"Right." Harry was trying hard. "Thanks, Carol, for every..."

Five minutes later the phone rang again and her heart plunged. Surely little Harry couldn't have—not in five minutes...

She said "Yes?" in a small frightened voice, and then grew limp with relief. Blake's voice, asking:

"Did you sleep well, my darling?"

"Oh." She sat down weakly. "Good morning. Yes, I did—better than ever in my life, I think. And you?"

"I hated to sleep, because then I couldn't remember—not consciously."

"But my dear, you must. After all, there are a lot of days."

"I suppose there are. Well—I won't keep you now. I'll see you in an hour."

"Yes. Goodbye..."

She wondered uneasily, entering the office, how well they could hide the miracle that had happened to them. I know it's written all over me, she thought; I hope he doesn't have to see me about anything.

To her great relief he did not speak to her during the day. But as she walked towards the carline an automobile drew up at the curb and a voice said laughingly: "Could I give you a lift, lady?" Happiness surged over her in a warm flood. She frowned. "I don't usually encourage pickups, but just this once..." and slipped in beside him.

He laughed low in his throat. "How'd I do today?"

"Beautifully. I felt as if I'd never even been introduced to you."

At the Sherwood she said firmly: "It's my turn to cook dinner, so you needn't argue it."

He grinned. "I wouldn't dare. But can't I bring over that steak you were bragging about?"

"Yes, you can do that."

He said: "You darling!" and then shook himself. "Get out, before I forget where we are!"

She got out, hugging to her heart the thought of one more evening snatched from the clutching hands of Olympus.

But they knew, very certainly, that they could not be too much together. The Sherwood was as indifferent and impersonal as any city apartment house, but their friends might find them out.

When Porter Murray or any other acquaintance suggested an engagement she accepted promptly, and Blake, for all the hunger in his eyes, admitted that she was right. On those evenings he made it a point to drop in on his friends or to instigate a bridge game at his club.

He abhorred concealment and subterfuge—furtiveness had no place in his heart or in his love—but he wanted with all the intensity of his nature to protect Carol from the loose tongues of a curious world.

On the first Sunday they drove far into the country and left the car in a lane, to merge themselves with the actual solitude of the woods. The day was soft and dim, and pines stood in their own darkness, breathing the incense of their own needles.

"Sit down, Blake, and let's finish talking this out."

He thrust his hands into the pockets of his leather jacket to hide their trembling.

"Must we—drag problems into Paradise?"

"What better place could there be to face a problem than in Paradise?" She found a great oak whose spreading roots formed a resting place and he dropped down beside her and leaned his head against the trunk.

"Have you written Irma?" she asked unevenly.

"No." She might come home, he knew, to "put a stop to this performance." "I'm going down there and have it out with her. Next weekend."

ica through Henry James Froman, whose hobby is prophecy and whose new book, "The Story of Prophecy," interprets, among other things, the calculations of Dr. D. Davidson, a British member of parliament.

"It's not essential to the prophecy that dire calamities begin instantly on September 16," Forman says. "The prophetic designer of the Great Pyramid did not prophesy an immediate war."

"The theory, however, is that the period is to be one of adjustment and that it quite likely will include a war in the Near East, in which the enlarged Israel will be triumphant; and that the rupture of the second Advent will come in that period, and the judgment of nations."

"You must understand," he adds, "that pyramidologists (those who have figured out the Great Pyramid) do not believe that Christ literally shall be made manifest, but rather that our present period of spiritual strife and trouble is preparatory to a religious rebirth."

"And the Israel spoken of is not Judah, but Britain. The process by which the British Israel is deduced is too long to go into now."

Completed Calculation
The prophetic meaning of the Great Pyramid, Froman explains, is drawn from the extent, size and direction of its inner passages and chambers, by a complicated series of calculations worked out by Dr. Davidson.

By Dr. Davidson's formula, the pyramid foretold the first coming of Christ, the World war, the next ten years of comparative prosperity and the depression.

"Do I believe that the pyramid and Dr. Davidson are right?" Froman asks himself. "I don't know. When I read the standard

Human and Other Nature

By W. F. BRUCE

It often takes an object lesson to be convincing. A certain member of a dignified profession in Cisco found himself one Sunday night recently in the act of getting out of a hole of water. The plunge was involuntary and unsettling. It was not on the program. For a short moment the dignified citizen was in a quandary, hesitant as to whether to go on and walk into church with his bedraggled trousers and his squishy shoes, or to take advantage of a real reason of his customary excuse for absenting himself. But not for long. He turned and in a round-about course under cover of darkness made his way home. His early return brought inquiries from his wife that met with little response from his dignity, until her eye caught something in his appearance that partly explained. "I fell into a hole," supplemented the explanation sufficiently for the time being. The wife was solicitous and sympathetic enough. But as the citizen walked on into a darkened room and glanced back at her face he saw a restrained smile and heard a subdued chuckle. That is a good end to the incident.

But we do not want to miss the lesson. It is serious enough when a city does not throw proper protection around the dignity of its citizens. In this instance one more absentee threw his influence of discouragement upon the already small enough evening attendance; indifferent members found a little more encouragement for their own habitual absence. There was a very effective thwarting of a good intention. It is true that this particular hole along a frequented path was barricaded by some formidable obstructions that were outlined in the darkness. But there was a passage way between them and if one were urgent he could make his way through.

A bar should have been placed there and fastened at each end so that it could not be pushed off by the most determined pedestrian trying to make his way along. In fact a menacing hole of water like that should be surrounded by a woven fence well anchored at each of its four corners so that no amount of persistent energy would enable anyone to precipitate himself into the muddy bath. Then the dignity and decorum of our citizenry would be adequately safeguarded.

Egyptologists who believe the pyramid to be only a tomb, I am quite convinced they are right. Then I read Davidson and follow his involved calculations, and I wonder whether it may not be possible that both sides are right."
