COURT ORDER DEFIED BY SIT-DOWNERS

SIX INJURED WHEN SHERIFF LEADS ATTACK

82 Strikers and 125 Soldiers Involved in Clash

WAUKENGAN, Ill., Feb. 19 (AP)—Sitdown strikers defied a court eviction order in the Fansteel Metallurgical corporation plants today, at least six persons being injured in a clash between 82 strikers and about 125 soldiers.

The disorder occurred when the sheriff, leading the men against the door of the occupied buildings with a battering ram, was repulsed. The sheriff withdrew his forces for a conference with company officials.

The strikers barricaded themselves Wednesday, demanding recognition of their union as a collective bargaining agency.

Last Rites Said for R. D. Green at Abilene Thursday

ABILENE, Feb. 19. (Spc)—Hundreds of students, teachers, friends and admirers, who filled to overflowing the auditorium of the First Methodist church, gathered for final tribute of R. D. Green, longtime superintendent of the Abilene school system, yesterday afternoon. Mr. Green, 62, died unexpectedly early Monday of a heart attack.

Dr. Thomas W. Brabham, president of McMurry college, read a scripture passage. Dr. Millard A. Jenkins, pastor of the First Baptist church, led in prayer. The Rev. J. H. Hamblen, pastor of the First Methodist church, reviewed the eventual and successful life of Mr. Green.

Dr. E. B. Surface, pastor of the Central Presbyterian church, in a brief address made the audience feel and believe that the body of the departed had only fallen asleep and that the spirit moved onward unimpeded by the flesh.

A short time before his death, Mr. Green had requested Dr. Jenkins and Dr. Surface to officiate whenever death should come to him.

Burial was at Baird, where the Masonic bodies conducted grave-site services.

The state of Texas officially took cognizance of the Abilenean's death Wednesday in the legislature's unanimous passing of a resolution of tribute to his memory. A copy was mailed to Mrs. Green.

R. D. Green was born November 21, 1874 in Denton county at Elizabethtown. He was graduated from North Texas State Teachers college, when it was still a private institution.

He began his teaching career in his native county, teaching for four years at Justin and Lewisville. While still in school he married May Patterson, Runnels county, August 17, 1898 at Content.

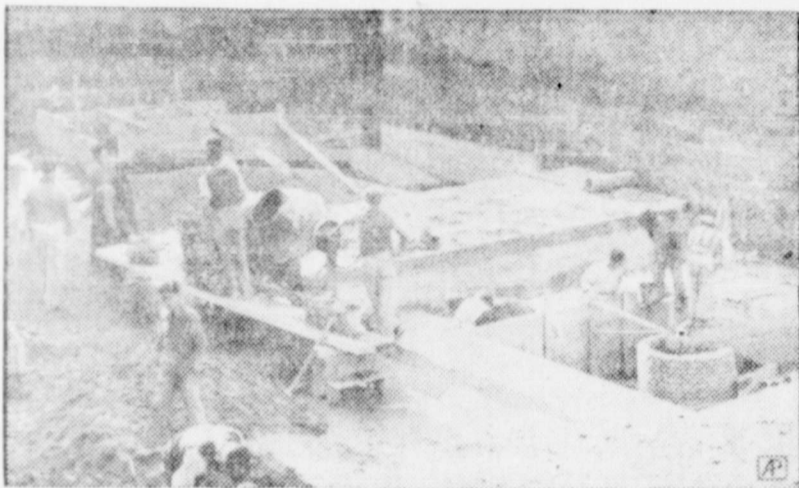

From Denton county Mr. Green moved to Midland, where he was superintendent of city schools for two years. Next he moved to Baird where he lived nine years. He was city superintendent and later county superintendent for two years. The next five years were spent in Cisco where he headed the school system until he moved to Abilene in the fall of 1917.

In 1926 Mr. Green was elected president of the Texas State Teacher's association at the El Paso convention. He was the only West Texas public school man ever to hold that office. Another school owes him a debt as he served on the building and trustee employment committees for McMurry college.

Other public services were vice-president of the board of stewards at the First Methodist church

Digging In Against Bombings

Eighteen hundred workmen are completing bomb shelters expected to make the city safe from insurgent air raids.

Residents of the Spanish capital, with less time to prepare against bombs, take their refuge where they find it.

Ultra-Modern Shelter Making Valencia Safe

VALENCIA, Spain, Feb. 19 (AP)—Aerial bombardments, which have sown so much death in Spain, soon will hold little terror for this Levante capital, probable next target for the insurgent projectiles.

The poorest protected city in Spain a few months ago, Valencia is being equipped with ultra-modern bomb-proof shelters which will make it one of the safest in Europe.

Forty-six refuges of reinforced concrete, believed built so strongly that not even the most powerful aerial bombs would penetrate them, are nearing completion.

With capacities ranging from 1,000 to 4,000 persons each, they will afford protection against death from the skies to nearly 1,000,000 persons should Valencia be bombed.

Spending $7,000,000

Eighteen hundred workmen are engaged on the project, which involves the expenditure of some 50,000,000 pesetas, over $7,000,000 at current exchange.

Water lies so near the surface in most parts of the city that few buildings have basements. The difficulty of obtaining solid resting for buildings in the treacherous underoil has compelled extreme lightness of structure.

Ashurst Says FD Plan "Is Mildest"

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19 (AP)—Chairman Ashurst of the senate judiciary committee described President Roosevelt's court reorganization proposal today as "the mildest of all bills that could have been introduced under the circumstances."

The Arizona democrat took the floor after Senator Gillette, of Iowa, opponent of the plan, had urged a law to prevent invalidation of acts of congress if two or more justices of the supreme court dissent.

Ashurst said: "I marvel at the moderation of the president." Commenting on occasions when congress changed the number of court justices, he said, "No one made himself so ridiculous as to suggest this unconstitutional."

Senate Passes Bill to Extend Proration Law

AUSTIN, Feb. 19. (AP)—The senate today approved extending the state oil and gas proration law two years from the expiration date next September.

The house had previously voted the extension. The bill now goes to Governor Allred who was expected to sign it. The measure was introduced by Rep. Geo. A. Davissand, Jr., of Eastland county.

CISCO MASONS COMPLIMENTED

Breck, Cisco Groups Inspected

William J. Miller, Commandery inspector of Houston, complimented the Breckenridge Commandery 92, Knights Templar and the Cisco Commandery 47, Knights Templar, highly for their work following his joint inspection of both groups last night. Thirty-one masons attended the meeting. Breckenridge sent nine representatives, Cisco had 19. The remaining three were commanders from out of the district, including Miller.

Out of the 31 Masons present 18 were past commanders. This is an unusually high percentage, the inspector said.

The delegations met at the Savoy cafe at 6 p. m. yesterday and had a supper and at 7:30 they assembled in the Mason Temple for the inspection.

Dust Fog Over State Settled By Rains Today

(By Associated Press) Light rains settled the dust in Texas today, only a few cities reporting fogs of silt remaining.

Showers extended from the eastern border to San Angelo and southward into the Rio Grande valley.

Dust clouds lifted over the drought-plagued Oklahoma panhandle but a new "black blizzard" threatened. Visibility had risen to a mile in some of the worst hit places.

Kansas had two more deaths, bringing the influenza and pneumonia toll to 12 in the past few days.

Through the Editor's Spectacles

By GEORGE

He was a very persuasive and measuring young fellow and he positively glowed with a desire to make somebody happy with a free set of books worth $100. To give him an ear one would think that the sole reason that his publishing company existed was to manufacture $100 sets of books to give to people. It was one of the most philanthropic spirits I ever saw, and it moved me to the point of tears of gratitude.

He showed us a number of cards signed by names I well know and who are certainly to be credited with the virtues of prudence and commonsense and some of the gullibility of a dupe.

"We are going to give four lucky people in this community a set of these volumes," he assured me. "Just fill out this card with the information asked and your name will be considered for one of them. There's no obligation."

Across the front of the card was plainly printed the same assurance that no obligation was incurred. The whole program, declared the salesman blandly, was a means for advertising the encyclopedia, or whatever it was, in the community. If I would just write a letter of recommendation if I happened to be one of the lucky persons, the company would be so happy the president would probably fall on my neck and weep if he happened to be around.

Curiosity to know what would happen next got the better of me, and after considering the card I filled it out, let him go as he did without further talk, and waited to see what would happen.

Four or five days later it did. Here came a plump big fellow, with a certain brusqueness of manner and a positive assurance that I would be overjoyed to see him.

"I'm bringing you some good news," he declared. "You've been selected to receive one of the four free sets of our famous encyclopedia."

"What do I have to buy to get it?" I inquired.

"Not a thing. All we ask is that you pay the express charges of about $1.75 on the books from the publishing house."

Now I thought that was mighty sweet of him, but I told him I didn't think enough of books I had never seen to pay five cents on them, etc. In other words I wasn't interested. I wasn't interested principally because I'm in the publishing business myself and I know that no publisher in his right mind is going to give away $100 set of books just to advertise them by means of gushing letters of gratitude and recommendation.

"Of course," said the brusque purveyor of abominable fibs, "if you are not interested in a free

ESCAPE IF YOU CAN

BY FREDERICK JACKSON

SYNOPSIS: Count Vronski, who was blackmailing Anne Phelps with love letters, is shot dead in Anne's studio. Bigelow, the American from Paris, finds Anne and Karsanokoff, the glamorous dancer, staring at the corpse. They hide it during a party, then Bigelow and Dr. Austrelitz, the psychologist, move it to Vronski's rooms. Police arrest Thorne Dryden, a wealthy chap who hated Vronski, and his wife, Lorna, vanishes. Anne and Bigelow set out to find her, getting a clue as to her whereabouts from Madge, the night club hostess.

Chapter 27
A Race Through Traffic

As Anne and Bigelow left Madge's, a newsboy at the door was offering the early morning papers at slightly advanced prices. Bigelow bought them while the doorman hailed a taxi and in the cab, they examined them eagerly. There was a new development. A taxi-driver had come forward who had driven a woman to Vronski's address at a little after 3 a. m. on the night of the murder. He said that she was young and dark and was wearing a small hat with an eye-veil and a mink coat. He had picked her upon Park avenue near the corner of 62nd street, which was the street on which the Drydens lived.

Shown photographs of Lorna Dryden among those of other attractive dark women, however, he had been unable to pick Mrs. Dryden out, but he thought he might recognize his passenger again if he saw her.

Meanwhile, the papers reported, the police had instigated a nationwide search for the missing beauty and they confidently expected to locate her within the next 24 hours.

Bigelow put down the papers and looked thoughtfully out of the window. If Mrs. Dryden had gone to Vronski's apartment at something after five that morning, her husband must have seen her from his place of concealment across the street. Was that why he thought there must be some connection between her and Bigelow and Austrelitz? And was that why he was withholding from the police the information he had?

"Do you suppose it was Lorna who robbed the apartment?" asked Anne. "If Vronski had been blackmailing her, she might have, you know, in a desperate effort to recover her letters."

"But would she have stolen the Vronski jewels as well?"

"Perhaps—to cover up her tracks and conceal her real purpose. She might have figured, too, that she was only getting some of her own back—if she had paid him a good deal of hush money?"

"It's a possibility, I suppose," nodded Bigelow.

"I hope it was Lorna," murmured Anne. "Then she'd have got my letters as well. I've been wondering why I haven't heard from the thief about them. If the police had them, I think Hagedorn would have mentioned the fact, don't you?"

"Probably—although one can't be sure of that. Hagedorn is a wily devil. He might be keeping a card or two up his sleeve. And I hardly imagine you'd hear from the thief about them just now. To admit possession would be too incriminating."

"Yes, I suppose so," sighed Anne. "If only Lorna has them! I'll never be happy again until I get them back and see them destroyed."

Bigelow said nothing.

"Are you resenting the fact that I haven't told you all about them?" Anne asked wistfully.

"I've no right to resent anything you do," Bigelow reminded her just a little stiffly. "It's for you to give or withhold your confidence as you see fit, of course."

Anne stole a glance at his rather grim profile. "Not at all," she said sadly. "I have no choice whatever in this instance. You see, the secret isn't mine."

So she was shielding somebody else! With a sinking heart, Bigelow wondered who the man could be.

That Little Man Again

As he emerged from the elevator into the hotel lobby the next morning at half past eight, his glance lighted on an inconspicuous little man waiting near the door—the same man who had been following him for the past few days. And Bigelow stopped short, scowling with rage. He was beginning to find the silent espionage of the little man unbearable. Wherever he went, this man was behind him, saying nothing, doing nothing, only watching everything that occurred and presumably reporting afterward to someone who was taking a great interest in Bigelow's movements.

In the beginning, Bigelow hadn't minded at all. He had nothing more to hide, once the studio had been thoroughly cleaned and the towel and things had been done before this spy had been planted on his trail. But as time passed, Bigelow's irritation grew. He found the little man's eternal presence in his neighborhood more and more hampering. Before going anywhere or doing anything, he found himself compelled to stop and consider what his mysterious shadow would make of it. There was the constant anxiety lest—through him—innocent people might be involved in the case. Presumably whomever he addressed would become instantly suspect.

And he had no idea for whom this spy was acting. Hagedorn had not revealed much interest in him when they had met at Anne's but Hagedorn was not the type to put all his cards on the table. He might have set this watcher at Bigelow's heels. Or Strong might be responsible. Or even—he thought wildly—the baronness! Fortunately, until now, his comings and goings had been of such small consequence that their being noted and reported could not have benefitted anyone. But he had no intention of leading others to Lorna Dryden if they should be lucky enough to find her, so he was determined to lose the man this time if he never succeeded again.

Accordingly, he suddenly stopped and turned back, as though he had forgotten something and returned to his room to telephone Anne. Explaining the situation, briefly, he asked her to drive into the park and wait there for him, leaving the engine running. He thought that if the little man was afoot, it might be possible to elude him by stepping into Anne's car and driving off before a taxi could be commandeered in which the man could follow. So he set forth briskly to walk toward the park. But the little man was not afoot—he was trailing along about a block behind Bigelow in a small roadster.

The size and general appearance of this roadster, was however, somewhat encouraging. It seemed to Bigelow that Anne's car would be capable of much greater speed and that they would be able to out-distance him without much difficulty.

The "shadow" was only about a hundred yards behind him when he finally came up with Anne.

"He's got a car," announced Bigelow under his breath, by way of greeting, "but it doesn't look terribly speedy."

"No, it doesn't," agreed Anne, considering it through the rear vision mirror. "But one can't get much of a lead in traffic and with the lights constantly changing."

"No. We'll have to try strategy first and if that doesn't succeed, do a bit of speeding after we get out of town. Are you afraid of fast driving?"

"Not if I trust the driver—and the car," answered Anne.

"Would you be nervous if I drove?"

"No, of course not."

Bigelow Tries a Dodge

She moved over and Bigelow got into the driver's seat. And they started. He headed for the 72nd street gate to cut through to Riverside drive. The shadow in the smaller car followed easily behind them. But Bigelow was biding his time, seizing the opportunity to test the brakes and the gear-shift and to see how quickly Anne's car could pick up. He cheered up as he felt the power of the engine and realized that the motor was in sweet condition.

Once on the drive, he began to let it out a bit. The man followed him accelerated, too, and as the lights changed at 86th street, and Bigelow was forced to halt for the cross-traffic, the man in the smaller roadster came up nearly abreast of him.

"You seem to be going my way," said Bigelow, leaning forward and addressing the little man, with a glint in his eye. The little man smiled a faint smile of derision, but made no reply.

"He's rather an unpleasant little man close to, isn't he?" remarked Bigelow to Anne then, in a conversational tone, but loud enough for the man to hear.

"Very," agreed Anne succinctly. The lights changed. The little man was distracted by their conversation or else his engine didn't respond as quickly as Anne's and they shot ahead again. But a big limousine was preceding them at a dignified and rather leisurely pace and an old battered looking coupe was preventing them from passing. Eventually, they got by after a prolonged tooting on the siren, and at 93rd street, they got a break because the lights changed again just as they were approaching the crossing and they got through, but the little man was held up.

Bigelow sped on to 94th street and there turned east to West End avenue and north on West End avenue until the lights went against him there, when he managed to swing east again to Broadway and then north once more.

"This may do it!" he cried excitedly to Anne.

"Will he try to follow us or proceed along the drive?" asked Anne.

"I should think he'd have to try to follow us, since he has no idea where we're heading for," cried Bigelow.

Acting on this assumption, he presently turned west again into the drive.

Hearts Don't Beat in Hawaii--They Hula

HONOLULU, Feb. 19. (AP)—To most people the word "hula" means Hawaii's rhythmic dance, but to a Hawaiian language purist it may mean anything from a palpitating heart to raising something with a lever.

So says Leila Holt, assistant territorial archivist, citing a 100-year-old Hawaiian dictionary as authority. The ancient volume, published in 1836, was discovered during a reclassification of the archives.

Hula, the dictionary says, means, among other things: a swelling; a protuberance under the arm; a twitching, as of the eye; an involuntary muscular movement; to palpitate, as the heart; to throb, as an artery; to go through a solid substance; to expel or eject; and to raise with a lever.

The University of Iowa is the ninth largest state institution in the nation.

The apple, as shown by the Bible, is one of the oldest cultivated fruits. It was brought to America by early settlers.

Rotary Makes Fast Time in Moran Test

MORAN, Feb. 19. (Sp.)—The fact that a rotary equipped drilling rig can make speed drilling a hole was proven in the Ungren & Frazier well on the C. B. Snyder ranch five miles northwest of town. This well started drilling Wednesday of last week, and Tuesday of this week the bit went into the big time, found there at 1,500 feet. The time is usually around 400 feet thick. When the time is drilled through, the bit is expected to go into the Moran sand, which will be tested thoroughly before being passed up.

The rotary makes approximately 300 feet a day in ordinary formations and around 200 feet a day in hard rock structures.

Three crews of five men to a crew are employed on the well. Most of the men are working out of Abilene at the present time, but some have rented apartments here and others are expected to do so.

Two Affable Generals Command Flood Front

AP Feature Service Writer
WASHINGTON, Feb. 19.—Two generals who have spent most of their lives dodging swivel chairs are giving the army's orders in the midwest flood crisis.

One is affable General Malin Craig, veteran of the Spanish and World wars and the army chief of staff. It's his duty to tackle the avalanche of evacuation and relief work that falls to the department of war in the flood-emergency.

The other is smiling Major General Edward M. Markham, chief of the army engineers, whose flood works in the lower Mississippi basin are on trial.

Bald, medium-sized, 61, a native Missourian, Craig works in civilian clothes, earns $10,200 a year.

Veteran Disaster Worker

As Captain Craig he took his first disaster in stride when the earthquake of 1906 levelled San Francisco. He found then that his army books didn't have any instruction on mid-wifery in emergency refugee camps.

As General Craig, fourth corps area commander, he directed the army's evacuation and emergency relief work in the Mississippi flood of 1927.

Next he took on the Florida hurricane of 1928 from the same post, and the Long Beach, Calif., quake of 1932 as commander of the fourth army in San Francisco.

"This," he sighs, "is my fifth, and I hope my last, appearance in the disaster game."

'A Hell of a Job'

General Craig and his staff have been sleeping by their phones since January 21 in the war department. One of the phones is tagged "White House."

Then there's Major General Markham, to whom Craig and the army general staff have entrusted the engineering phases of the army work on all rivers. The president has sent him to survey the flood area with other hand-picked observers and bring back a report and recommendations.

Markham is 40, short, fairly heavy, earns $8,000 a year. His brown eyes snap under a full head of black hair. He likes to use his smile for enforcing orders—when he can.

Flood control is his meat, although he is proud of his 303rd engineers, a unit he organized and commanded in the World war.

A native of Troy, N. Y., Markham specialized in engineering at West Point, and after ranging the world for the army, found himself a major and president of the Mississippi river flood control commission at Memphis, Tenn., in 1912.

For four years he learned about rivers from the Mississippi and there introduced steel-reinforced concrete mats as superior to and faster to lay than willow-mat-and-rock-pile revetments.

Kansas Sea Dog Sails the Prairies

MORELAND, Kas., Feb. 19 (AP)—It took 51 years for D. D. Kay, pioneer banker, to realize his ambition to sail a boat on the Kansas prairies.

Kansas had billowy acres of buffalo grass—but no waves—when Kay, who crossed the ocean three times in his youth, came here in 1885.

Now, thanks to completion of a WPA project he sponsored, Kay can sail to his heart's content on a lake 30 feet deep and covering 110 acres.

Kay built a 15-foot sailboat and takes members of his Sunday school class regularly as passengers.

O'Hare Learns French Via Valet

O'Hare, "The Genial Man of the Air," broadcast over a coast-to-coast network National Broadcasting Company and the Columbia Broadcasting System, recently hired a valet because he wanted to learn French. "Husk" and the Paris-presser were to carry on conversations in purest French. Trouble was that the valet wanted to learn English. "Husk" found himself giving more English words than he received in French. So he made a new deal. "Husk" was to pay the valet a quarter every time he lapsed into English and every time the valet forgot himself he was to pay his employer the same amount. The first week of the trial netted the valet $17.75 only half a dollar and "Husk" O'Hare soon expects to be getting his French lessons for nothing.

O'Hare and his band will appear at Lake Cisco Saturday, February 27.

Charters in January Less Than Year Ago

AUSTIN, Feb. 19. (Sp)—Number of new charters granted to Texas corporations during January increased in comparison with the preceding month, but decreased in comparison with the corresponding month last year, according to the University of Texas bureau of business research. Total capitalization showed an increase over both comparable periods.

"According to reports from the secretary of state's office there were 129 corporations chartered in January, an increase of 14.2 per cent over the preceding month, but a decline of 8.5 per cent from the like month last year," the bureau announced. "Capitalization totaled $1,980,000, an increase of 15.3 per cent over the preceding month and 17.2 per cent over January last year."

Corporations engaged in manufacturing comprised the only group that showed outstanding gains over both comparable periods.
