BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

Rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when His glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad with exceeding joy.—1 Pet. iv. 13.

Faith should be cheerful, and trust should be glad, and our follies end sin, not our years, make us sad.

Life is brief, duty grave, but with rain-folded wings, Of yesterday's sunshine the grateful heart sings.

See golden days, fruitful of golden deeds, with joy and love triumphing.—Milton.

New Public Attitude?

HE apathetic state of the public in the current political campaign has puzzled politicians and observers alike.

It is too early to arouse the political fever. Or, perhaps, the average citizen is so concerned with economic problems...

If this line of thought saturates the voting public thoroughly the ordinary political platform will have to be radically revised.

are in close contact with a large element of the voters, and their impressions from such contact are sufficient to convince them of the necessity of this new trend.

Intelligent Salesmanship Needed

THERE is food for thought in the statement of B. C. Forbes that too many business organizations are unwisely contracting their sales efforts.

It is quite true that people have less inclination to buy in hard times. But it is also true that until people do begin buying there will be no recovery...

Give Faith Says Texas Mother

THE words of any leader, who excels in a task—whether that task be great or small—will be accorded the weight they justify by all who share in similar tasks and responsibilities.

A fundamental in child-rearing, says Mrs. Grace Noll Crowell, of Dallas, is faith. Mrs. Crowell speaks with authority—for she was chosen as the American Mother for 1938...

"I believe that without religion, without God to help her, no mother can do her work," she said. "Every mother should give her child faith—something to hold on to long after she is gone."

Truly, it is a responsibility of motherhood, to inculcate faith in the heart of children faith in God, faith in justice and right, faith in purpose and the ultimate design of living; faith in themselves; faith in mankind.

Human and Other Nature

By W. F. BRUCE

The stamp of the government we take as a final word of approval; not that we think it is the last word in evaluation, but it is in legalization, and that counts considerable.

But all of that is only abuse of government. Governments are not altogether human they existed... they are ordained of God for evil and raise for whom it is due. Caesar's persecution of Christians bears the image of God, our talent, our very being, to be given to Him.

WHAT IT MEANS--- The New Wage-Hour Bill

For more than a year, administration leaders have been scissoring and pasting on wage and hour legislation. The Senate labor committee chucked the first version overboard. The second version passed the Senate, stuck in the House. The third effort comes before the House for a vote May 23, or soon thereafter. In the following simple history of wage and hour legislation, Mr. Beatty explains why congress is having so much trouble with what seemed at first blush to be a legislative snap.

By MORGAN M. BEATTY AP Feature Service Writer WASHINGTON, May 21—Keep in mind one simple fact and you can come pretty close to untangling the confusing arguments in Congress over a wage and hour law.

Here is the key to the riddle: The wage and hour bill coming up for a vote in the House would send the nation into legislative territory never before explored by the federal government.

That means nobody can say for sure what a wage and hour law eventually would do—or for—American workers and employers. All anybody can do is say what he thinks or hopes such a law would do.

People who are for it say the law would put a floor under wages and a ceiling over hours—in fact, standardize the labor costs for all industry. They believe it would assure fair competition and reward the efficient industrialist, while penalizing the wage chiseler.

People who are against such a law insist you can't lay down a flat minimum wage all over the country and expect it to be fair to all alike. Southerners argue it is cheaper to live down there, so wages would be lower. Northerners charge southerners want to lure industries into their cheap-labor communities.

The problem for Congress is much the same as it was in 1912, when the federal reserve was established, or in 1919, when a prohibition enforcement law went on the statute books.

In both cases Congress was trying to correct obvious abuses. In the case of the federal reserve, Congress was right, even though bankers predicted chaos. In the case of prohibition, Congress was wrong. The liquor problem was not solved by that law.

A Political Issue

The present attempt to pass a wage and hour law represents a beginning in a field where abuses have always existed—the labor market.

During World War days, when modern industry was improving machinery to produce quantities of goods never before dreamed of, agitation for laws against sweat shops, child labor, and other abuses appeared in national political forums.

Congress passed a law to establish minimum wages for women in the District of Columbia. The Supreme Court promptly chucked it out, said the law interfered with a woman's right to sell her labor for any price she wished. A similar law to end child labor met the Supreme Court argument that child labor was a state, not a federal, problem.

Abuses in the field of labor continued. National political platforms recognized the issue as a political one. The Roosevelt platform of 1936 went so far as to suggest that 48 separate states could not be expected to offer a solution.

The Whittling Begins

After the election, New Deal law drafters promptly went to work, and last year offered their handiwork to a Congressional committee.

Witness after witness appeared. Strange as it may seem, organized labor popped up with objections. Employers and others kicked—some even argued the law would strangle whole industries to death.

The law was whittled down to meet objection after objection, and passed in the Senate. It provided for a board to administer a 40-cent wage and a 40-hour week—$16 for a five-day week with a differential for low-wage southern states. Even so, it was beginning to look as if a wage and hour law would be tough sledding.

In the House, a small bloc of Congressmen bottled up the whole thing in the powerful rules committee—a group which runs the Stop and Go sign for legislation. Chairman Mary Norton of the

Collie to Support McCraw for Governor

EASTLAND, May 21—Senator Willbourne B. Collie of Eastland announced here Saturday that he will take an active part in Attorney General William McCraw's campaign for governor.

Senator Collie, who is now serving his second term in the senate, said: "I want to help my good friend, Attorney General McCraw, in his campaign because I am convinced he is the candidate best qualified to serve the best interests of Texas and Texans. He has demonstrated that he can get along with all departments, and we need cooperation now as never before."
