SERIAL STORY MYSTERY AT THE LAZY R BY CLARKE NEWLON

COPYRIGHT, 1938 NEA SERVICE, INC.

CAST OF CHARACTERS NIKKI JEROME, heroine; blond, popular, is engaged to six-foot black-haired...

Yesterday: The stranger introduces himself as Bancroft and then advises that he has decided to go to Wyoming, too, for a vacation.

CHAPTER III

When the train pulled into the little station Aunt Amy was at the bottom of the steps to wrap Nikki in a thoroughgoing embrace that left them both breathless and laughing.

Bancroft and Sarto were standing not more than 20 feet away. . . . The first words they heard were Sarto's.

"My, my. Such a grownup lady. Why the last time you were out here . . ."

"Now Amy, Nikki knows how big she was five years ago. Sure she's grown up. Never sick a day in her life. Just like her uncle. But she needs some ranch cooking to put a little life into her."

"Wait a minute, you two," she said. "Don't you want to meet the man I'm going to marry?" Steve hadn't completely forgiven her for the club car incident with Bancroft, but the rest of the trip had passed without incident, largely because Nikki had wisely decided to stay out of the lounge.

Now she led Steve over and introduced him to her aunt who kissed him, and to her uncle who welcomed him largely. Nikki saw out of the corner of her eye that Bancroft and Sarto were standing several yards away by their luggage, waiting for the family group to break up. Steve hadn't seen them. Uncle Jim finally walked over to them, shook hands and brought them back.

"Amy," he said, "these gentlemen are Mr. Bancroft and Mr. Sarto. They figure on going out to the Lazy R for a spell. Reekon you must have met on the train," turning to Nikki and Steve, Nikki nodded. "We met," said Steve briefly, without looking at Nikki.

"Come on, then," said Uncle Jim. "Things have shore changed, Nikki. Remember the old truck we used to cart along in? Well, we got a new one. It was Amy's idea, but it certainly does the business. Why you can haul a dozen people in this thing, with all their baggage."

He kept up a cheerful, noisy conversation all the 15 miles to the ranch, telling Nikki and Steve about the improvements and some of the guests already there. He included Bancroft and Sarto in his conversation with a casual wave of his hand and a turn of his head.

"Hey Rance," he yelled at the station wagon came to a stop in the drive before the ranch house. "Here's Nikki," and a tow-headed young man in khaki trousers and shirt came strolling up from the corral.

"Rance," said Nikki, and kissed him enthusiastically. Rance drew back, completely covered with a fine cloud of pleased confusion.

"Looks like a lot of kissing going on," observed Uncle Jim. "Rance, your ears are redder than that cow barn."

"Hush," said Aunt Amy. "Rance and Nikki were practically brought up together," she explained diplomatically to Steve. "They're just like brother and sister. Hey Bill," she called to a wiry young man crossing the yard. "Come and take these bags up to the porch."

Nikki breathed deeply and turned her eyes to the purple fringe of mountains to the west. She let her gaze linger over the distance and lost her troubles. Nothing very wrong could happen in such a setting.

"We've just time to change and have a short ride before supper," she called to Steve. "I'll beat you dressed. Rance, may we have a couple of horses? How about Marquis and Palamino?"

"Both a little old," said Rance. "Remember it's been five years."

that Steve, after all, was an "easter" too.

As they walked up to the ranch-house Nikki was amazed at the changes. The old house had a new wing on the south which almost doubled its size, and a wide patio ran completely across the front. She saw several men in ten-gallon hats, high-heeled boots and bright neckerchiefs over brighter shirts.

"Your hired hands certainly have changed," Nikki said to her uncle.

"Lord, Nikki, them ain't the hands. All the old boys are guides now. They're round in back. These new whippersnappers are just the atmosphere. They can all ride, though, and they look like cowboys. When you see one kinda hefty around the middle you'll know he ain't atmosphere. He's a dude."

Uncle Jim pointed out the cabins to her. There were six of them.

"Four we built just to accommodate two people each," he said. "The other two will hold as many as six. They're for the family groups. All with hot and cold running water," he added grandly. Nikki learned that the new wing held several private rooms and a big dining hall.

Uncle Jim dropped back to explain something to Steve. Aunt Amy was taking Sarto and Bancroft in to register and to get them settled. They had preferred one of the cabins. Rance fell into step with Nikki.

"It's awful nice to have you back again Nikki," he said gently, and Nikki knew that Rance loved her just as he always had loved her and that he probably would never dream of telling her. Rance was the son of an old partner of Uncle Jim and when the partner and his wife had died, Uncle Jim and Aunt Amy took the boy into their own home, reared him as their own and sent him away to the State University.

After one year Rance returned to the Lazy R and said he would rather go to work than to school, and after a while Uncle Jim made him foreman. Nikki always thought that Rance would like to have continued school, but that he felt his foster parents couldn't afford the money to send him.

Nikki breathed deeply and turned her eyes to the purple fringe of mountains to the west. She let her gaze linger over the distance and lost her troubles. Nothing very wrong could happen in such a setting.

"We've just time to change and have a short ride before supper," she called to Steve. "I'll beat you dressed. Rance, may we have a couple of horses? How about Marquis and Palamino?"

"Both a little old," said Rance. "Remember it's been five years."

But I've got a couple of good ones saved for you."

They returned from an hour's ride ravenous and after dinner Steve suggested a walk. The sun had just set, a huge orange circle that left the indescribable beauty of a soft, western dusk. They were both still in riding togs, Nikki linked her arm through Steve's and they strolled silently, both lost in the magic loveliness of the twilight. The dust of the yard padded their footsteps. There was no sound except the faint notes of radio music from the background of the ranch house, framed against the darkening sky.

They stopped at the corral fence, their figures hidden by the shadow of a shed. In a swift motion Steve took Nikki in his arms and their differences vanished like the outlines of the distant hills fading into the lowering night. They stood thus for many seconds, their bodies locked, oblivious to the ranch and to the world. Then they heard a man speak and Nikki stepped back.

Bancroft and Sarto were standing not more than 20 feet away, unable to see them because of the shadow of the shed. The first words they heard were Sarto's.

"I know you're the boss, but I'm tellin' you this is no spot for us. Let's get away."

Steve started to take a step out into the light and reveal their presence, but a warning pressure on his arm from Nikki stopped him. This was no time for ethics. Bancroft was answering in the same low, smooth voice, but the undertone of metallic hardness was rising.

"I know what I'm doing. The girl saw the money. I tell you. I don't know how much she knows. Suppose she wires old Jerome. We've got to keep an eye on her."

"Is that the only reason you want to keep an eye on her?" asked Sarto, sarcastically. "Wouldn't you like, maybe . . ."

"You won't say any more," said Bancroft and Nikki shuddered at the way he said it. "You're not smart, Sarto, but you're too smart to say any more. And don't think, either, Sarto. Don't ever always done the thinking on doing the thinking."

He walked away. Sarto after a moment. The night had changed and strangely sinister.

Would-Be Chicken Thief Loses Shoes

DUQUOIN, Ill. July 23 (AP)—A would-be chicken thief jumped right out of his shoes when James Miller fired at him.

Miller fired one shot into the night when he was awakened by his "chicken alarm." The next morning he found one shoe in the chicken yard and the other in the alley.

Rivers Rage--

San Saba, was threatened for the third consecutive day as Brady creek, which divides the town, rose to within a foot of the levee top.

When it appeared the water would go over the wall, a fire siren was sounded and merchants, who twice before lifted their goods to top shelves, started boarding up their doors.

Two and a half inches of rain fell at Brady last night, bringing the total precipitation to 12 inches since last Tuesday.

Shortly before noon the creek was rising only an inch an hour, and observers held out hope that the protecting wall would again save the town from widespread damage.

San Angelo reported slow rains fell all night along the North Concho, and that the South Concho was flowing a tremendous volume of water. The streams converge near San Angelo.

No estimate of damage could be obtained, many sections being reachable only by boats, but the loss in San Saba alone was placed between $200,000 and $300,000.
