BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

To the counselors of peace is joy.—Prov. xii. 20.

Heard are the Voices, Heard are the Sages, The Worlds and the Ages, Choose well, your choice is brief and yet endless.

Here are eyes to regard you, In Eternity's stillness; Here all is fullness, Ye strive, to reward you; Work and despair not.—GOETHE.

Reflect upon your present blessings, of which every man has many; not on your past misfortunes, of which all have some.—Dakin.

Washington Liked Fun on His Own Birthday

WASHINGTON has come down to us as a dour, severe, and somewhat forbidding man. It is a shame that this is true, for Washington in his way was just as human as Lincoln.

It is true that he was rich, Lincoln poor. It is true that he had a natural austerity that was foreign to Lincoln. But the old idea that Washington was a sort of tin idol with no human impulses in him is simply all wrong.

Hence, as we celebrate his birthday, 207

years after the event, it is interesting to recall how he himself passed one of them.

It was the winter of 1797. His second term as president was drawing to a close—a few weeks later he was to leave the capital, Philadelphia, and retire to Mt. Vernon. The famous Farewell Address had been delivered. Only formalities remained to the closing of one of the most illustrious public careers of all time.

WASHINGTON kept a diary intermittently throughout his life. And on this date he wrote:

"Rain in the Night, cloudy forenoon with the Wind at East, afterwards at S. W. clear and very fine, went in the evening to an elegant entertaint. given on my birth night. Mery, 38."

The lifelong farmer comes to the front throughout his diaries, and the careful entry of the weather is characteristic. ("Mery, 38" means "Mercury 38—the temperature.")

But behind that simple entry lies the fact that it was a swell party.

It was given at Rickett's Amphitheater and at least 1200 people jammed in. One who was present wrote: "The show was a very brilliant one, but such scrambling to go to supper that there was danger of being squeezed to death. The Vice-President handed in Mrs. Washington, and the President immediately followed. The applause with which they were received was indescribable. The same was shown on their return from supper. The music added greatly to the interest of the scene. The President staid till between 12 and 1."

AND though the President did not confide it to his diary, you may be sure that he enjoyed every minute of it. For the Father of His Country was no tin idol talking in maxims. He loved a good party.

The solemn words of the Farewell Address may well be read by every American today, not for their historic interest, but because they contain advice as worth hearing today as in 1796. But they make even better reading when we realize that they came from a human being, not a plaster saint.

Harrisburg, Pa., wants to stop night milk deliveries. Who's going to help father find the keyhole?

Vitamin diets are great things, but the healthiest man we know gears his diet to the grocery store ads.

About Our Friends

By STEF A. LONG

Sitting at the dinner table after having attended church where the stringed orchestra had played, the little girl asked her father if there were cats in heaven. "No, my child, you see cats have no souls and heaven is a place for the souls of people. But I am sure God has prepared a place where cats may go and be happy after death. You must think that He would not neglect to provide for everything great or small. But Daddy, if there are no cats in heaven, where do the angels get the strings for their harps?"

Bad weather stopped temporarily the work of cabin building at Lake Cisco. But quite a lot of progress has been made. Roads built out and quite a bit of rock work done. One can already see without too much imagination what it is going to look like when those 25 or more cabins are finished.

No project since the building of the dam and swimming pool, has been fraught with more possibilities for Cisco's future as a recreational center for central west Texas, than is this one of providing cabins for week-end vacationists and for tourists who may like to spend a week or two fishing, swimming, boating or just getting close to nature in a climate that is delightful during the day and blessed with gentle breezes at night, untrammelled with flies and mosquitoes and the humidity so prevalent in many other resort localities.

Many businessmen are already receiving inquiries as to availability of a rent cottage. And some of these business men are contemplating renting their cottages for the pleasure of friends in the business world, so that the hospitality of Cisco may be extended and more advertising of what we have to offer by word of mouth. We are looking forward to the day this project in its entirety will be an accomplished fact.

Letters From Our Readers

Dear Editor: The supreme test of any man is the spirit that directs his life. W. J. Bryan once said, "Selfishness is so strong in the average man that he cannot be trusted to carry out the will of the people." Jesus says, "By their fruits ye shall know them." Also, "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." W. Lee O'Daniel's poetry and songs give us a great insight to the spirit of the man. The beautiful thoughts that emanate from him could not be garnered by an evil-minded man. Thought is the most powerful dynamo known to man. It sits at the throttle of every invention, every enterprise, every industry, every accomplishment that ever has been, is, or ever will be.

Thought is not original with any individual. We reach up into the universe of thought and pull down just such thoughts as the vibrations of our own being is in tune to receive. We do not get thoughts, thoughts get us.

Thinking is not thought; thinking is like turning the dial on the radio. Thought is the entrancing music received from the distant broadcasting station.

If we judge W. Lee O'Daniel by the above standard we must conclude that his mind and spirit sometimes soar to sublime heights and breathe the ozone of Life Eternal. That in the quiet hours of meditation he is permitted to roam in the higher sunlit fields and pluck flowers from the garden of God's thoughts.

Any man who prays daily for divine guidance will not be found very far from the well beaten path of righteousness. Texas is fortunate to have such a man in the governor's mansion.

If the Texas house and senate will sit at the council table with Gov. W. Lee O'Daniel and heed his advice, future generations will not class them as "drunkards of Ephraim" (those that err in judgment and stumble in the way).

Human and Other Nature

By W. F. BRUCE

No picture in words has ever been drawn of luxury to excel that in Amos 6:1-6, in our lesson for today. Stretching themselves upon beds of ivory at ease in Zion, eating the choice lambs and calves, drinking wine in bowls; anointing themselves with the best oils, whiling away the hours that might grow tedious, with frivolous songs to the accompaniment of the most exquisite of instruments, shutting their eyes to the evil day reckoning that is sure to follow such easy useless living Amos 4:1 shows that the women were in full participation in these proceedings. They had the means, evidently, and why should they not use it this way and waste their lives if they wanted to? Perhaps they had no law against it; or if they did have why let it interfere with personal liberty?

But it does not take a law of the land to properly define such conduct. A law may be one, but is not the first nor most important, step toward remedying social ailments. These very words of Amos are the expression of a principle written in the very nature of the universe that gives us the best standard for measuring the real worth of what these people were doing. We are all subject to judgment for the effect and influence of our actions.

Other parts of Amos show that the wealth they were lavishing upon themselves had left many people in want. These careless leaders were simply fiddling while their land was burning, devastated with poverty, injustice, graft, drunkenness, and licentiousness. Sin is always destructive; it brings its own results. The Lord says a few verses following, "I abhor the excellency of Jacob." They could read their own fate in that of other places as good as their Zion and Samaria: "Pass to Calneh, to Hamath, to Gath, and see." Captivity was ahead of them. And all because they were following whims and appetites they called personal rights, instead of sensing the deeper principles that ought to govern human conduct.

BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

To the counsellors of peace is joy.—Prov. xii, 20.

Heard are the Voices
Heard are the Sages,
The Worlds and the Ages;
Choose well, your choice is Brief and yet endless.

Here are eyes to regard you,
In Eternity's stillness;
Here all is fulness,
Ye brave, to reward you,
Work and despair not.—GOETHE.

Reflect upon your present blessings, of which every man has many; not on your past misfortunes, of which all have some.—Dakin

Washington Liked Fun on His Own Birthday

WASHINGTON has come down to us as a dour, severe, and somewhat forbidding man. It is a shame that this is true, for Washington in his way was just as human as Lincoln.

It is true that he was rich, Lincoln poor. It is true that he had a natural austerity that was foreign to Lincoln. But the old idea that Washington was a sort of tin idol with no human impulses in him is simply all wrong.

Hence, as we celebrate his birthday, 207

years after the event, it is interesting to recall how he himself passed one of them.

It was the winter of 1797. His second term as president was drawing to a close—a few weeks later he was to leave the capital, Philadelphia, and retire to Mt. Vernon. The famous Farewell Address had been delivered. Only formalities remained to the closing of one of the most illustrious public careers of all time.

WASHINGTON kept a diary intermittently throughout his life. And on this date he wrote:

"Rain in the Night, cloudy forenoon with the Wind at East, afterwards at S. W. clear and very fine, went in the evening to an elegant entertaint. given on my birth night, Mery, 38."

The lifelong farmer comes to the front throughout his diaries, and the careful entry of the weather is characteristic. ("Mery, 38" means "Mercury 38—the temperature.")

But behind that simple entry lies the fact that it was a swell party.

It was given at Rickett's Amphitheater and at least 1200 people jammed in. One who was present wrote: "The show was a very brilliant one, but such scrambling to go to supper that there was danger of being squeezed to death. The Vice-President handed in Mrs. Washington, and the President immediately followed. The applause with which they were received was indescribable. The same was shown on their return from supper. The music added greatly to the interest of the scene. The President staid till between 12 and 1."

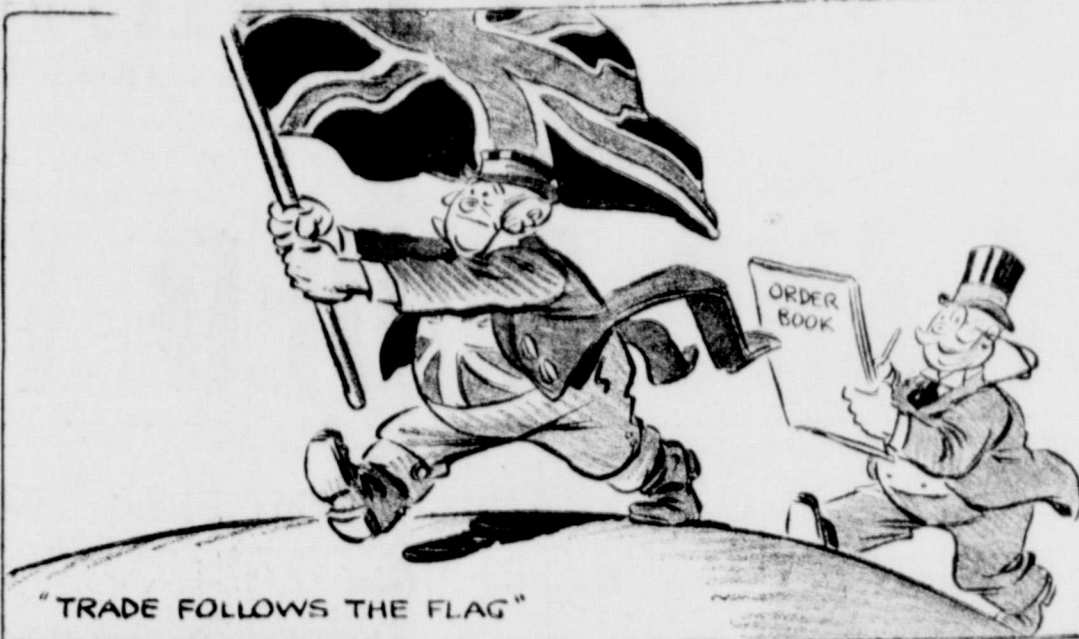

AND though the President did not confide it to his diary, you may be sure that he enjoyed every minute of it. For the Father of His Country was no tin idol talking in maxims. He loved a good party.

The solemn words of the Farewell Address may well be read by every American today, not for their historic interest, but because they contain advice as worth hearing today as in 1796. But they make even better reading when we realize that they came from a human being, not a plaster saint.

Harrisburg, Pa., wants to stop night milk deliveries. Who's going to help father find the keyhole?

Vitamin diets are great things, but the healthiest man we know gears his diet to the grocery store ads.

About Our Friends

By STEF A. LONG

Sitting at the dinner table after having attended church where the stringed orchestra had played, the little girl asked her father if there were cats in heaven. "No, my child, you see cats have no souls and heaven is a place for the souls of people. But I am sure God has prepared a place where cats may go and be happy after death. You must think that He would not neglect to provide for everything great or small. But Daddy, if there are no cats in heaven, where do the angels get the strings for their harps?"

No project since the building of the dam and swimming pool, has been fraught with more possibilities for Cisco's future as a recreational center for central west Texas, than is this one of providing cabins for week-end vacationists and for tourists who may like to spend a week or two fishing, swimming, boating or just getting close to nature in a climate that is delightful during the day and blessed with gentle breezes at night, untrammelled with flies and mosquitoes and the humidity so prevalent in many other resort localities.

Many businessmen are already receiving inquiries as to availability of a rent cottage. . . And some of these business men are contemplating renting these cottages for the pleasure of friends in the business world, so that the hospitality of Cisco may be extended and more advertising of what we have broadcast by word of mouth. . . Letters From Our Readers

Dear Editor:
The supreme test of any man is the spirit that directs his life. W. J. Bryan once said, "Selfishness is so strong in the average man that he cannot be trusted to carry out the will of the people." Jesus says, "By their fruits ye shall know them." Also, "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." W. Lee O'Daniel's poetry and songs give us a great insight to the spirit of the man. The beautiful thoughts that emanate from him could not be garnered by an evil-minded man. Thought is the most powerful dynamo known to man. It sits at the throttle of every invention, every enterprise, every industry, every accomplishment that ever has been, is, or ever will be.

Thought is not original with any individual. We reach up into the universe of thought and pull down just such thoughts as the vibrations of our own being is in tune to receive. We do not get thoughts, thoughts get us.

Thinking is not thought; thinking is like turning the dial on the radio. Thought is the entrancing music received from the distant broadcasting station.

If we judge W. Lee O'Daniel by the above standard we must conclude that his mind and spirit sometimes soar to sublime heights and breathe the ozone of Life Eternal. That in the quiet hours of meditation he is permitted to roam in the higher sunlit fields and pick flowers from the garden of God's thoughts.

Any man who prays daily for divine guidance will not be found very far from the well beaten path of righteousness. Texas is fortunate to have such a man in the governors' mansion.

If the Texas house and senate will sit at the council table with Gov. W. Lee O'Daniel and heed his advice, future generations will not class them as "drunkards of Ephriam" (those that err in judgment and stumble in the way).

Human and Other Nature

By W. F. BRUCE

No picture in words has ever been drawn of luxury to excel that in Amos 6:1-6, in our lesson for today. Stretching themselves upon beds of ivory at ease in Zion, eating the choice lambs and calves, drinking wine in bowls; anointing themselves with the best oils, whiling away the hours that might grow tedious, with frivolous songs to the accompaniment of the most exquisite of instruments, shutting their eyes to the evil day reckoning that is sure to follow such easy useless living. Amos 4:1 shows that the women were in full participation in these proceedings. They had the means, evidently, and why should they not use it this way and waste their lives if they wanted to? Perhaps they had no law against it, or if they did have why let it interfere with personal liberty?

But it does not take a law of the land to properly define such conduct. A law may be one, but is not the first nor most important, step toward remedying social ailments. These very words of Amos are the expression of a principle written in the very nature of the universe that gives us the best standard for measuring the real worth of what these people were doing. We are all subject to judgment for the effect and influence of our actions.

Other parts of Amos show that the wealth they were lavishing upon themselves had left many people in want. These careless leaders were simply fiddling while their land was burning, devastated with poverty, injustice, graft, drunkenness, and licentiousness. Sin is always destructive; it brings its own results. The Lord says a few verses following, "I abhor the excellency of Jacob." They could read their own fate in that of other places as good as their Zion and Samaria: "Pass to Calneh, to Hamath, to Gath, and see." Captivity was ahead of them. And all because they were following whims and appetites they called personal rights, instead of sensing the deeper principles that ought to govern human conduct.

The first award is a beautiful loving cup and $100 in cash, and for that reason all members of the family and their friends should back their favorite baby, by asking for "Baby Step" coupons at the stores co-operating. They are FREE for the asking. Another quick and effective way to help baby is to secure a few mail subscriptions to The Daily Press.

All "Baby Step" coupons received from the merchants and on subscriptions to The Cisco Daily Press should be placed in the ballot box in The Daily Press office. This box will be opened over so often and the 20 highest babies will be named in the Honor Roll, and in the position they occupy. Parents, relatives and friends can follow their favorites progress.

If the merchant you do most of your business with does not issue "Baby Step" coupons, have him call The Cisco Daily Press to make arrangements of coupons.

Proud parents of the babies entered are counting on the help of their friends and relatives and it is up to them to ask for "Baby Parade" coupons to place their baby in FIRST PLACE, and declared winner of the loving cup and $100.00 cash.

One-Eye Plans to "Officially" Open Frisco Fair

ABILENE, Feb. 18.—The World's Fair of California, at San Francisco, opened today when President Roosevelt pressed the button that swung open the gates, but the opening will not be official until I get there and crush the gates. One-Eye, Connelly, king of gate crashers, said here while on a visit to the Hartman-Simmons university campus.

Connelly was here en route to San Francisco from a winter home in Orlando, Florida.

"After we officially open the San Francisco Exposition, when I crash its gates, I'll leave for New York, to open the world's fair there on April 29," Connelly said. One-Eye, in reminiscent mood, seemed the gate at Boyles Thirty Acres, in Jersey City, for the Jack Dempsey-Georges Carpentier heavyweight championship fight in 1921, the hardest one he has ever crashed.

"Tex Ricker, who was one of my close friends, was determined that I wouldn't crash his gate that day. He was a real showman. He did pretty well for a while. These were fifteen entrances to the arena. He had put me out of thirteen of them.

"Then an idea flashed into my mind. I borrowed a white coat from a concession stand, and grabbed a basket of hot dogs and a bucket of coffee. I walked right by the gateman with a word that I had lunch for the telegraph operators at the ringside.

Another story One-Eye likes to tell is an experience at the 1923 national democratic convention at Houston.

Tom Hickman, then chief of Texas Rangers in charge of policing the convention, approached One-Eye after he had been tossed out of the convention hall seven times.

SERIAL STORY

WOMEN WANT BEAUTY!

BY LOUISE HOLMES
COPYRIGHT, 1936, NEA SERVICE, INC.

CAST OF CHARACTERS
SUSIE LAMBERT—She served waffles and dreamed of being beautiful.
DICK TREMAINE—He liked Susie's waffles but he couldn't see Susie.
JEFF BOWMAN—His chief concern was to make Susie as beautiful as she wanted to be.

Yesterday, Susie balks at going through with her beauty program. But Jeff convinces her she must try.

CHAPTER XII
Jeff felt helpless. Knowing that Susie's reaction was that of any well-bred girl, he could think of no convincing arguments. He started at the beginning again.

"You must have had some reason for answering Mr. Harker's ad," he suggested.

"Yes," Susie twisted her cotton-gloved hands. Dick—to be the kind of girl Dick admired—to get away from the drab nothingness of her life—it had seemed worth any sacrifice.

"The reason still remains?" he went on, noticing the change in her defiant attitude.

"Oh, yes," she answered forlornly.

"Then give it a try. A little publicity won't hurt you. The movie start lie awake nights trying to think up ways to attract attention. Let Mr. Harker tell an interested feminine public what you didn't eat to drag off superfluous pounds, let him tell the kind of shampoo that brought out the gold in your hair—"

"Gold in my hair—" she looked up disgustedly.

"Let him publish your picture now—and later. Listen to the envious gasp when they see Suzanne—"

"Suzanne—" Susie started in-creously.

"Yes. That's what the Chief said. 'Susie it is, when we finish with her she'll be Suzanne.' And he'll do it, Susie. That is, he'll do it if you'll help, if you'll cooperate and not be difficult."

Susie blazed a glance at him. "I'm not difficult. I'm nice inside."

"That's the girl," Jeff mentally patted himself on the back. At handling women he was a wizard, positively a wizard. Parking the car in the company's garage, he ushered Susie through the store to an elevator. A buzz followed them, subdued laughter brought the purplish flush to Susie's round face. Once before she'd heard a buzz like that, laughter like that. It was in a fraternity house dressing room.

After four years the old wound had still not healed. What had she let herself in for? Oh, to be out of it—to be back at the waffle irons. She set her teeth and mentally prepared a speech of courteous withdrawal for Mr. Harker. She'd bet her best hat, a thing she did not own, that Mr. Harker was one of those wolves they had been talking about, nice like a sheep on the outside, cold and crafty underneath.

At the door of his office, with the switchboard girl staring round-eyed, after her, Susie almost turned and bolted. She did half turn and Jeff's arm shot out to stop her. In that split second before she faced about a voice came to Susie. It was her own voice. "I'd give my hope of heaven, I'd give the rest of my life—"

She dropped her head in shame. It was a humble, disciplined Susie who walked into Mr. Harker's office. Rising, he came around the desk, holding out his hand.

Jeff said, "This is Susie Lambert, Mr. Harker." He knew, from the Chief's controlled expression that he hadn't expected anything quite so bad as Susie. And Susie was at her very worst, brows drawn, eyes defiant, desperately afraid that she was about to meet unkind laughter again.

Mr. Harker shook her hand and led her to a chair close to his desk. Jeff, his mission accomplished, went to the outer office and Mr. Harker followed him.

"She's pretty bad," he said thoughtfully. Then he brightened. "But that's what I wanted."

Jeff said, "Be a little cagey with her, Chief. She bolted once, said she wouldn't be a guinea pig."

John Harker's eyes lighted with a laugh. "That's good—swell. I was afraid she didn't have spirit. Anything else I should know? What did your mother say?"

"Edna likes her, she sees possibilities. Susie has a nice sense of humor, she's repressed and inhibited—it'll take a lot of doing."

Jeff felt very proud to have the Chief ask his advice. But that was like the Chief. The swiftest man a guy ever worked for.

Mr. Harker went back to Susie. He met her hurrying toward the door and pretended not to notice the flight.

"Sit down, Susie," he said. I'll call you Susie because we're going to see a lot of each other in the next several months. Let's talk things over a little."

She sat down, nervously smoothing her gloves. "I—I don't think I can do it, Mr. Harker." She spoke as one who was about to have her tonsils removed.

"Tell me why," he said gently. In truth Mr. Harker was of the same opinion at the moment.

Susie bit her lip to curb the threatening tears. "Be—because I won't be a success, because I'm impossible," she said chokingly. "Because you are doing it for publicity and failure would be bad for your business." Saying this Susie raised her eyes and Mr. Harker's doubts vanished. Her eyes were misted, they were the most desperate unhappy eyes he had ever seen. He leaned across the desk.

"You want us to try, don't you, Susie?"

"Oh, yes. It's been so—awful." What had been so awful she left to his imagination and he nodded understandingly.

"Perhaps we can't make a ravine beauty out of you; to tell the truth, there are very few ravine beauties in the world. But you can have charm, Susie, you can attract without startling beauty, we can help you make the most of yourself."

"Can you?" she inquired, leaning toward him wistfully.

"Yes indeed we can," Harder assured. Then, remembering the guinea pig complex, he added, "You'll have to understand that our criticism is no more personal than your doctor's would be if he said you had a bad appendix or if your French teacher complained of your accent in trying to help you. See what I mean?"

"I think so." After a hesitation she said, "The picture in the paper, Mr. Harker—I don't like it. People don't seem to realize that all girls are the same inside—they'll laugh at me—"

Mr. Harker nodded sympathetically. "No picture shall be published unless you are willing. I have a photographer—he's tops in his line. We have in mind a picture that will suggest your bad points without emphasizing them. Will you let him try? You shall see the proofs and decide."

He was so kind that Susie's defense went down in disorder. She found herself agreeing to everything, submitting willingly. And with the first hard moment over things began to happen. Susie was photographed from every angle.

At first furiously conscious of herself, she gradually accepted the impersonal treatment. With the departure of the cameraman other people were called in consultation. A physical director not connected with the store, a blunt, forceful man with a Scandinavian accent, Miss Fleming, head of the Beauty Salon, a middle-aged woman with skin like a girl.

She squinted at Susie, making notes on a pad. Hair—oil treatment, frequent shampoos, daily sunning. Skin—shows faulty diet, needs bleaching, massage, nourishment. Eyes—very good when face is thinner. Teeth—excellent. Mouth—interesting—much improved by proper use of lipstick. Brows—pluck. She underlined this. She wrote, "Nose," and put a cross after it. Obviously Susie's nose was to be the stumbling block.

Susie looked dazedly at Mr. Harker, at Miss Fleming who was making notes about her fingernails, at Clifford Kane who as manager of her campaign, must know every step of the way. They kept talking together as if she weren't there. Exercise would help her awkwardness. If not, dancing lessons would turn the trick. When it was all said and done, what about her nose? Her feet weren't so bad, it was the shoes. But her nose— Susie felt twisted and torn and pummeled. (To Be Continued)

Banquets Need Not Only Food --But Thought

By JOAN DURHAM
AP Feature Service Writer
Getting a creditable crowd to the event isn't the banquet chairman's only job—a second problem, just as important, is seeing that the affair provides the greatest possible enjoyment to the greatest number of those who attend.

Attracting the banqueters, of course, is the first problem, and old-timers in banquet planning usually give two major suggestions on that:

Send out interesting announcements—have them at least slightly humorous, if possible. Announce the major attraction and mail the announcements about two weeks in advance—far enough ahead to get the event placed on the calendar but still not so early that the card is likely to be forgotten.

As to problem No. 2, here are a few suggestions:
Have as many people as possible help in planning the banquet. Appoint committees to cover every detail, each committee headed by a person on whom you can rely. Not too many people on a committee—and be sure the duties don't conflict.

Keep long-winded speakers off the program. If you feel obligated to call on them there are two ways to minimize the difficulty. Ask the master of ceremonies to introduce them "so the rest of us will get at least a good look" or instruct the program chairman to send notes asking them to sit at the speakers' table and talk for a specific period of time—five minutes or so.

Additional hints:
Make sure a maximum number of people can see and hear to the best advantage.

Avoid place-cards at all but the speakers' table. They're usually necessary there to insure recognition of the chief speakers but at other tables they have to be changed so much at the last minute they aren't worth the trouble. Make every effort to see that

Mrs. Spencer Merry Wives Club Hostess

Sign in a Fort Worth lunch room: "Try our sandwiches, nobody likes a coward."

The day's bit of philosophy: "He who has a thousand friends Has not a friend to spare; And he who has one enemy Will meet him everywhere."

The mass of mail pouring in on Texas legislators is the heaviest in history. Most of the letters from the cities are protesting against the fair trade act and anti-discrimination bill. Very little has been heard yet from small towns and rural sections; and representatives of those districts are wondering about the attitude of their constituents toward these price-fixing measures which, it is pointed out, would raise prices in every town in Texas.

Many merchants are of the opinion the bills would help them but Jim Carroll, widely known newspaperman and executive secretary of the Texas Merchants association, takes the position that the bills would surrender to out-of-state manufacturers the power to fix the price that Texas consumers must pay; that, though the price to the consumer would be raised, there would be no corresponding increase in payment for raw materials or wages, consequently it would amount to a reduction in income for the consumer and, as proof, cites New York where the price of 4,800 items was raised 8 per cent after a price-fixing law was passed.

Carried Bench With Him

"Handcuff me to a bench outside. I imagine that might do it," Connelly replied. The officer complied, using the steel bracelets.

"In a few minutes I picked up the man, walked with him to the convention door and told the doorkeeper I was delivering it inside. There, Captain Hickman found me, got a hearty laugh, and gave me the privileges of the floor," the 63-year-old sports figure, who has been a one-eye witness of important athletic events since 1897, said.

Connelly's favorite sport is boxing. It was in the ring he lost his left eye. It was in a ring at Jamesville, Wis., in 1892. A second failed to hit his glove lace properly. It came out in the second round. In blocking a punch, the metallic tip flicked into his left eye, cutting the cornea and destroying the sight.

Connelly says Otto Floto, then sports editor of the Denver Post, tagged him One-eye. At a fight in Colorado Springs, Connelly was at the ringside when Floto spied him. "Hi, One-eye, show the boys your ticket," he called. Connelly pointed to his eye, and said, "Here it is."

"Does he hike the monkey?" The sports boys tagged me and I can take it," he said.

On the Hardin-Simmons University campus, during his stop-over, Connelly spoke at the student chapel. "Do as I tell you, not as I do," Connelly said urging the student body to make the most of their opportunities in "This school education, rather than in the college of hard knocks, in which I've had to learn what little I know."

Connelly came here on an invitation of long standing, extended him on various occasions by the Hardin-Simmons Cowboy Band, which he had met as both attended events of national significance.

campaign for his cousin, Jerry Sadler, who was elected state railroad commissioner. Halcomb was Jerry's campaign manager. Incidentally, the picturesque Hick, in speaking of someone he doesn't especially like, has a saying, "Yes, that fellow is studying to be a halfwit."

Another recent visitor to the capital city was Joe Caldwell, former legislator from Asherton, who was welcomed to southwest Texas in a most unusual fashion. When he stopped his car in front of a friend's house just at nightfall, a wildcat jumped into his lap. (The half-crown animal was tame.)

Even more startling was the experience of Constable Dusty Rhodes of Fort Worth (who was in Austin a few days ago). Some years back, the authorities were hunting for the victims of the Handley murders. Rhodes stopped his auto just at dusk on a bridge over the Trinity, looked over the balustrade and found himself gazing into the faces of three corpses. One man went to the electric chair and another is in Alcatraz because of that discovery.

A well known Austin man who lives in a hotel has a regular hotel telephone and also has an outside phone. The other night, he was lonesome so he called the hotel on the outside line, had the hotel operator connect him with his room and then—one receiver in each hand—he carried on a conversation with himself.

Text: Amos 6:1-6; I Peter 2:11, 12; 4:1-5

BY WILLIAM E. GILROY, D. D., Editor of Advance

IN the days of prohibition criticism of that "noble experiment" was usually from the standpoint of personal liberty and the right of the individual to drink. There were few, if any, who defended the liquor traffic, or who sought to see it re-established on social grounds. The most intense opponents of prohibition almost all recognized the social evils associated with the traffic and strongly professed to be against the re-establishment of the saloon.

They that the liquor traffic has been re-established legally in the nation, or in most parts of it, it is the social aspect of it and the social perils associated with it that are again being emphasized.

It is this aspect that is presented in this temperance lesson, and the Bible—both in the Old and New Testaments—offers plenty of material for such a lesson. These plain and intense words of the prophet Amos might be applied with very little change to our own day.

WE are witnessing in many parts of American society today not only a great increase in the drinking of alcoholic liquor but also an adoption, or resumption, of the drinking habit on the part of many people who were at one time total abstainers.

In respect to these things the temperance lessons drawn from the Bible can be equally drawn from our newspapers as they reflect this moral weakening in the life of today. It would be appalling, if we were not influenced by a cynical disregard of some of the most serious factors in our social life, to consider the extent to which alcohol is associated with moral and social tragedy.

There are, of course, the frightful accidents on the highways, so large a proportion of which are due to drunken driving or to the driving of those whose nerve and judgment have been weakened by drinking, even though they may not have reached the drunken stage. Of course, all highway accidents are not due to drink. A sober man who is reckless or careless or uses bad judgment may be even more dangerous on the highway than a drinking man who is by nature careful and of good judgment.

A generation ago we would have been outraged at the idea of allowing a drinking man to operate a railroad locomotive, yet we allow drinking men to operate high-powered engines in automobiles that are not confined to tracks, and that have far greater potentialities of destruction than a locomotive which is concerned chiefly only with the passengers on its particular train.

BUT this is only a small part of the moral and social peril associated with drink and the part that it plays in human degradation. On one page of my morning paper is the story of a man convicted of fatally stabbing his best friend, with the explanation that it was in a drunken quarrel. In another column is the testimony of an unfaithful wife in a prominent family, with the most degrading incidents and the indication of drink as a factor.

A nation aroused to any concern for the plain and wholesome teaching of the Bible as well as for the plain and wholesome teaching that comes from life would not need temperance sermons, but would find such a sermon in the facts as would incline to personal habits of sobriety and to decisive effort to overcome the social degradation and perils of strong drink.

Big Game Inventory of the United States

The first nationwide attempt to determine the number of big game animals in the United States showed more than 5,000,000, reports the bureau of biological survey, U. S. Department of Agriculture. The survey was conducted in 1937 by the bureau with the cooperation from the national parks service, the forest service, state game and conservation commissions and other well-informed agencies and individuals. This survey covered deer, elk, antelope, buffalo, moose, mountain goat, bighorn sheep, peccary, bears and exotic European wild bears. The inventory did not include the animals in captivity.

Deer numbered more than 4,500,000. Michigan and Pennsylvania led in white-tailed deer with approximately 800,000 in each state. California had 450,000 mule and black-tailed deer. Elk in the country totaled 163,000; moose, 13,000; antelope, 130,000; bighorn sheep, 17,000; black bear, 81,000; grizzly bear, 1,100; and buffalo 4,100. There were 43,000 peccaries and 100 European wild bears.

Data for two more years, the division of wildlife research of the bureau of biological survey points out, is required before definite conclusions can be drawn on recent trends in big-game numbers. Accounts of animal numbers published some years ago, however, provide the division with some basis for comparison. Antelope, once thought facing extinction, increased about 500 per cent from 1924 to 1937. The numbers of bighorn sheep, on the other hand, dropped from 28,000 (an estimate made by E. T. Seton) to 17,000 within 22 years.

Protective measures have helped deer, elk, antelope and buffalo, the bureau of biological survey declares, but the inventory makes apparent the need for cooperative administrative efforts and vigorous application of sound management plans for preserving other big-game species. The mountain goat, grizzly bear, moose and caribou, in addition to the bighorn sheep, have declined in numbers in the past 20 years.

Texas Ranking in the Big-Game Inventory. In most cases Texas made a rather bad showing on the inventory. Of course, Texas should rank high on the list of most big game animals, but the inventory points to a different picture, this showing that Texas has much to do in building up her wildlife resources.

Texas ranks number five in the total numbers of white-tailed deer with 247,900. Michigan is number one with 874,716. Pennsylvania with 293,000 stands in the number two position. Then in order follows Minnesota and then Texas.

A rather bad picture since Texas is the largest state in the union with such a wonderful range for deer. Texas ranks thirteenth in the mule deer population with 14,320; moose, Texas has 258 elk ranking in twelfth place; pronghorn antelope, Texas has 9,675 and is in eighth place. Texas is in fifth place with 280 desert bighorn sheep. Only three states in the union have pec-

Births in Portugal last September numbered 14,956 as against 8,234 deaths.

Italy and Texas ranks first with a population of 32,600. Arizona and New Mexico have a total of 11,261. Forty states have black bear and Texas ranks twentieth with 207. Texas is in third position with a total of 505 buffalo.

Texas does not have any of the following, according to the recent report by the biological survey: Moose, Columbian black-tailed deer, caribou, rocky mountain bighorn, mountain goat, European wild bear and grizzly bear.

Measures that are now being taken by national and state agencies, backed by public support, may improve the situation within the next 20 years as has been done in the last 20 years for elk, deer, antelope and buffalo. Note: This information was obtained from a recent bulletin BS-122 published by the bureau of biological survey, United States Department of Agriculture.
