All Together, Now--Pull!

SPECULATION about the American defense effort may now be put aside. We have the verdict of the man best qualified to know. And his verdict is "Not good enough."

William S. Knudsen, production member of the Defense commission, has made, so to speak, his report on the first six months of the arms production program. And his considered verdict is that, particularly in the vital field of airplane production, we have fallen 30 per cent short of the goal.

The basic reason for this shortcoming, Knudsen says, is that industry and labor, "the two most important elements" have not been "sold" on the gravity of the situation.

KNUDSEN believes that there are certain fields in which the only way a marked and immediate increase in production can be shown is by working six or seven days a week instead of five. When such specific situations are uncovered, it should be done. There are plants not yet working three shifts which can be placed on this basis. Every situation is its own problem, with varying degrees of urgency and varying degrees of unused productive capacity. It seems certain that more centralized power must be established to iron out quickly specific kinks in the production line.

This does not mean that all social gains of shorter hours and better conditions must be thrown down the drain at once. But the power to increase the pressure at certain points where the bottlenecks are narrow must be granted soon. The situation has become such that unused capacity can no longer be tolerated.

Knudsen is dead right when he says that the public generally is 100 per cent behind the defense effort. And he is right again when he says that "the only way to get this program going is to get a concerted effort and a co-operative effort—an incentive fired with the spirit of sacrifice from everybody from the bench to the manager's desk."

Knudsen hit it again when he said that our problem is to "prove that a free people are capable of self-discipline and of productive work superior to that of a dictator's subjects."

It is not too much to say that the whole future of free government hangs on what the United States is able to accomplish during the next six months. We believe that the American people are prepared to make any required sacrifices to win through on this front, provided that the sacrifices are evenly distributed.

The armament effort is the joint effort of all American people, not if classes or groups. It is for their joint safety as a people.

They have never failed before to do what was necessary to be done. They will not fail today.

hand, squeezed it tight. "It will be great. You've missed them, and so have I, more than we've admitted. It's time to see your youngsters off to school, to be able to give them a college education, but it has been lonesome without them."

"It wasn't so bad, when Jerry left, we still had the twins. But with them gone, too—" Tears clouded her soft brown eyes.

"None of that, Martha," the doctor cautioned. "Wouldn't do to let them know how much we miss them. Anyway, we've two weeks to enjoy them. Why it will seem like all the Christmases we've had together. Remember Jerry's first one?"

Martha Connelly smiled, staring into the fire. How could she forget—ever? "You were so funny, Hugh."

She smiled at the memory. "Decorating that gigantic tree for such a tiny baby. And wanting to buy him a hobby horse."

The doctor laughed. "He was pretty small for it. But he rode it until he was 8, and both the twins used it. Good old Dapple Gray. Whatever became of that hobby horse?"

"It's still in the attic." "We'll get it down, put it under the tree tomorrow night. Jerry would get a kick out of it. But he's forgotten all about it."

Martha nodded, her mind on another Christmas. "We'll skip that next year—1918. You were in France, Hugh, and Jerry and I were alone."

"I'd just as soon forget that one, too. Never spent such a miserable day." "Say, if you think I was crazy about the hobby horse, how about the year you dressed four dolls for the twins?"

"That was fun. And they liked them—" "But they liked Jerry's air rifle better."

"And that bad year, when you needed a new suit, but Jerry got an electric train instead. That was foolish, Hugh. But I loved you for it."

"Jerry had his heart set on that train. I got along all right with my old suit," the doctor defended. "And will you ever forget how delighted we felt when I tried to play Santa Claus and Jerry piped up with: 'That's not Santa Claus. That's my Dad. He smells like either.'"

"We've had a world of happiness, Martha, in good times and bad. Now tomorrow—Say, did that tree come yet?"

"It's on the back porch, and it's tall enough to reach the ceiling. The ornaments are all in a box upstairs. Cleo wanted to trim it today, have it ready when the children got home, but I knew you'd never forgive me if I let her. You and Sheila and Kathleen can fix it tomorrow. And there'll be stockings on the mantel, too. I found them downtown—one for each of us, even Cleo."

"Here's will have to be the biggest. She still chuckles over Jerry asking to borrow one of her stockings to hang up, because he thought he'd get more in it. He couldn't have been much more than 5 or 6."

"I wonder if Cleo will pull that 'Lavdy, Doctor Hugh?' It's five dollars! again. She's been doing that for 20 years now, and it's just as funny as it was the first time. Someday I'm going to surprise her and only give her a dollar."

"You'd break her heart, Hugh. She really is surprised every year. You keep telling her that it will only be a dollar, and actually convince her. That's Cleo's contribution to the Christmas fun."

The doctor laughed again. "All right, Cleo shall have her check. Now how about the other things—?"

"Hugh, will you stop worrying?" Martha scolded, but there was no anger in her voice. "Sheila's and Kathleen's gifts are wrapped, hidden away. Jerry's will be delivered tomorrow. I have some perfectly hideous new neckties for you—"

CHRISTMAS RUSH

Martha Connelly smiled at the memory. How could she ever forget Jerry's first Christmas? "You were so funny, Hugh," she said, "decorating a gigantic tree and buying a hobby horse for such a tiny baby."

CHAPTER ONE
The doctor hurried up the snow-covered walk. Across the street a lad of 10 shouted, "Hi ya, Doc!" and followed his greeting with a snowball. The doctor waved back, laughed as he ducked. At the door he paused to wipe snow from a gold and black sign—"Dr. H. T. Connelly." He liked that sign, but Martha and the girls insisted it was an antique. It was out of date. He thought of the day when he had first hung it beside his door 28 years ago.

Let's Light Up Again This Christmas Eve— AMERICA'S NIGHT OF LIGHT

TWENTY-SIX years ago, as the tramp of mobilizing troops rang on the cobbles below, Sir Edward Grey turned from his window in the British Foreign Office and bowed his head. "The lamps are going out all over Europe; we shall not see them lit again in our lifetime," he said.

Little did he know that his figure of speech would become frighteningly real: that across whole continents men would grope and grovel in blackness; that the powers of darkness would drive mankind so far back toward the cave they would shrink from the light.

Even here, in America, we watch the darkness deepen, until it touches the edges of all our lives. This Christmas, 1940, will find many of our young men far from home. This Christmas Eve, in thousands of family groups, their absence will be felt. No one of us will not be sobered by thoughts of those we know in camp, or on the sea. Christmas will not be the same, this year, without them.

So, this year more than ever before, we Americans should reaffirm our faith in the decency and dignity of man. Everywhere else, the light of liberty has been quenched or dimmed by the darkness of dictatorship. Here is the only window of the world: let us keep this window bright! Again, let us make Christmas Eve America's Night of Light.

Last year, at this time, I suggested to my fellow-Americans that we light every lamp in America on Christmas Eve as America's answer to the blackout then just beginning abroad. Not in a spirit of boastfulness, but in humble thanksgiving for our freedom—and as a symbol of our determination to keep it.

Mayors and Governors issued proclamations. In great cities, and uncounted towns, there was such a blaze of light as had never been seen before. The people seized upon a suggestion that embodied their thoughts. They lighted their homes and their offices, their factories, their public buildings. Candles and lanterns glowed in the windows of lonely herders' shacks—and huge buildings were lighted in every room. Americans responded—and the Night of Light was born.

This Christmas, we Americans face a world even blacker than last year. A chaos of darkness which challenges our every belief and hope.

This year, again, I am asking our religious, political and civic leaders to cooperate in celebrating this second Night of Light. But proclamations are potent only as they embody the will and spirit of the people...

Will you — whether you can light a single candle, or throw the master switch of a whole factory — will you turn on the lights this Christmas Eve?

Will you—if you believe in what they stand for—keep them lit from dusk to midnight? So that others may see what we mean by the American way of life! So that we Americans may re-examine our beliefs! Rededicate ourselves to the traditions which made us—and the tasks which confront us!

Ours is the last window of the world, will you light your corner of it this Christmas Eve?

The seventh grade class of the grammar school honored Orbie Dee Jacobs with a "surprise party" in his home Friday morning at 8:30.

A scripture was read by Maynone Lomax, and Sandra Jean Coplin led the group in singing Christmas carols. Harmonica selections by Truman Smith and Edwin Dunn, and a Christmas Prayer by Maxine Boyd, were followed by a program entitled "The Spirit of Christmas."

Vivian Gene Grantham acted as Santa Claus and presented Mr. Jacobs with a gift bought by the class with money made by winning the prize in room count at the last Parent-Teacher association meeting.

A poem, written by the class members, was read as follows:

Your home to us is a shrine, Which we visit at Christmas time. Envious are those who cannot say: "I went to Orbie Dee's house today."

We bring a wee gift A play and a song. With every wish To cheer you along.

We earned our money And wrote our rhymes. And trust you will see beauty In our acrostic lines.

O is for oranges so round and yellow. That we hope Santa brings you, good fellow.

R is for rosy, round, and robust You're going to be that soon, we trust.

E is for everyone who belongs in our throng. To wish you happiness in poem and song. E is for everything, merry, also. Merry Christmas to you, which you'll have, I know. J is for Jesus, who died on the cross. To save humanity from ruin and loss.

A is for apple so round and red. We have brought some for you, to put by your bed. C is for cherry as red as his nose.

When the clock strikes twelve, down the chimney he goes. O is for outburst of mirth and of joy.

And may there be many for this good boy. B is for Bible which tells of Christ's birth.
