Combination of Faith, Good Works, Stands as Hope of a Troubled World

Text: James 1:17-22; 2:14-17; 4:13-17; 5:12.

BY WILLIAM E. GILROY, D. D., Editor of Advance
IN the last lesson, we were dealing with Paul's emphasis upon salvation by faith. Here, drawn from different passages in the epistle of James, we have an opportunity to see the other side of salvation and the Christian reference from the standpoint of character and conduct. It might seem that in contrast with Paul's doctrine of salvation by faith, James, reputed to be the brother of our Lord, is proclaiming the doctrine of salvation by works, but this is not so. James, just as much as Paul, believes faith is the very foundation of Christian living and of salvation. He is insistent, however, that faith produces the right sort of character and conduct; and if a man's life is not characterized by Christian works, the profession of faith is a pretense. So he asks very pointedly, "What doth it profit, my brethren, if a man say he hath faith, but have not works? can that faith save him?"

What he is saying is that such a man has no faith at all, for he brings it down to a matter of definite human and Christian obligation. Here, he says, is a brother or sister who is without clothing and without food. If one says to such a person, "Be warm and filled," and does nothing to meet their need, he is certainly lacking in Christian works, and also in any real faith.

JAMES makes a profound plea for the plain, honest, practical Christian living. There ought to

LOANS DEFINED
Webster defines "loans" as follows: "Anything furnished for temporary use."
When we pay what we borrow we make progress... we build up... we acquire.
When we merely pay interest on what we borrow we mark time. We all have a certain unsound feeling about a loan that runs on and on—never getting any smaller.
Obviously a loan is something that should be repaid... otherwise its usefulness has been destroyed.
