SUGAR BOWLS

This sugar trouble brings to mind a little story that used to be in the school readers. A small boy came to his mother crying and frightened at the fix he had got himself into. He had his hand in the sugar bowl and couldn't get it out. Then his mother tried to help him, and she couldn't get it out, either. The poor kid was hysterical with fright, and finally they had to break the sugar bowl to release the hand. It was a pity, too, for it was a beautiful sugar bowl.

And when it was broken, and the hand emerged safely, what do you think they found? The kid's hand was filled with lumps of sugar, still clutched tightly. That was why the hand wouldn't come out. It looks now as if our present sugar shortage in this country was caused by the same problem. Only we haven't broken the bowl—yet.

BROADER CURRENCY

We're certainly getting world-minded. Not only are we playing with the idea of joint U. S.-Canadian currency and suggesting a hemispheric currency good from Hudson Bay to Tierra del Fuego, but Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau talks of a uniform international currency after the war.

That would be a wonderful thing, indeed, for foreign travel and trade and the settling of international balances, and so on. Nearly every country now has its own coinage and paper money, and in later years the exchange problem has been getting harder and harder. It would take considerable effort, no doubt, to persuade most nations to give up their special currency and money-unit systems, and accept those of other countries. There has been patriotism, as well as art and business, in these varied coinages and currencies. But once accepted and become familiar, there might be great benefits in it.

That, however, is a matter to take up after the war. Perhaps some time afterward. There may have to be a lot of national scars healed first.

BACK TO BIKES

We may reasonably expect a bicycle epidemic in the spring, with this economical mode of transportation rising like a tidal wave. And that wave may roll higher and higher while the war lasts. It may be limited only by manufacturing power and materials. The government may approve, because only a small part of the materials that have been going into automobiles should suffice for this compromise between walking and driving.

It will go a little hard with some of us, spoiled as we are by the luxurious comfort of automobiles. But maybe we can get used to it. The boys and girls, anyway, won't mind. The middle-aged will mostly be all right, too, when they once regain the knack of balance and get their back and leg muscles toughened up again. We may see even grandpa peddling stoically along the street and trying not to crash the traffic lights. Millions of people have been doing this right along, in Old World cities, although their bikes are wearing out lately and many of them are riding on their rims. If they can pedal to work, presumably we can, with our better bikes and our ample means of buying them.

We might even see the time when the whole family—father, mother and two or three children—are out together for their weekend bicycle ride, combining it with a Sunday picnic.

OIL IN WAR TIME

The oil industry was prepared for war long before that fateful December 7, 1941. Today it is devoting its full energies and resources to the job of meeting the combined military and civilian needs of the country.

According to The Lamp, a publication of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey: "The fortunate location of the nation's producing areas, in California and the Texas Gulf Coast, in Mid-Continental states and the Caribbean, makes possible the uninterrupted flow of petroleum products wherever needed—whether in the Pacific or on the West Coast, in the Middle West or the Southwest, on the Atlantic Seaboard or ocean, to our Allies in Europe or to the friendly nations to the south."

Oil must perform many a task in war-time. Most obvious is that of keeping lubricants, engine fuels and furnace oils flowing to the four corners of the country. In addition, the industry has been called upon to increase its production of 100 octane gasoline three times, to greatly increase the production of tulene, which is a basic material in the manufacture of TNT, and to produce the principal raw materials for the production of the great quantities of synthetic rubber now planned. The industry is confident of its ability to meet the demand.

It is possible that, due to transfer of oil tankers to our Allies and the destruction of other tankers by enemy action, there may be temporary shortages of oil products in some areas, which will make equitable rationing necessary. But the industry's production and refining capacity is the greatest in the world by a vast margin. It is indispensable to assure final victory for the United Nations.

FACE DANGER WITH CONFIDENCE

In a recent letter to members, President Koeneke of the American Bankers Association, said:

"The problems of war are not new to this association. It has served through two wars and has seen other critical days in its 67 years of existence. Some of the financial problems of this conflict will be new; others will be similar to those we have faced before. Whatever they are, we will solve them.

"Bankers can render immediate service to national welfare through their day by day contacts with millions of their customers who will look to them for information and advice. We of the banking business can render no greater service to the nation at this time than that of bringing to the people calm counsel and sober judgment to the end that they may face danger with confidence and meet it with courage."

The people are learning just what private banking means to this kind of a country. The banker is the individual's expert adviser in helping him to meet the financial and investment problems produced by war. He is the Government's effective ally in selling gigantic quantities of Defense Bonds. He is the mainstay of productive industry, in making loans for the building of new plants and the expansion of old.

Banking is geared to the needs of the time, as it has always been. Its work in a hundred fields is essential to the success of the war effort.

HIS COUNTRY MEANS MUCH TO C. COLLIER

GLADEWATER, Feb. 5.—Did anyone say the army lacked morale?

Here's a letter received by V. D. Collier of near Gladewater, from a son, Curtis Collier, who is in the coast artillery at Hawaii:

"Dad, you don't have to worry a bit about me. I think I have had sufficient training in Uncle Sam's forces to take care of myself.

"Of course, we don't know what can and probably will happen before the war is a thing of the past.

Doubtless, we will lose some very valuable men. If I happen to be one of that die—defending something which is both sacred and belonging to you. Don't you think so? If I don't come out of this war alive, you can rest assured that there will be a 'damned' good many of these Japs that won't come through, either."
