1,038 BRITISH BOMBERS ATTACK HUGE KRUPP WORKS WITH SEVER-ITY SECOND ONLY TO COLOGNE'S

LONDON, June 2. --- One thousand and thirty-eight British bombing planes made the second disastrous raid on Germany Monday night. The swarm of raiders centered on the great Krupp Arms Works at Essen in the populous Ruhr area, the very heart of the Nazi war industry.

As they returned, an intelligence officer stated there was no reason why Great Britain should not send 2,000, or even 4,000 bombers, over Naziland every night --- that only bad weather prevented a 1,000-plane raid on Germany Sunday night, like the one that blasted Cologne, a city of 850,000 people, Saturday

Winston Churchill announced to a cheering house of commons the exact number of plaes that engaged in last night's attack, and said nearly all of them had hurled their bombs, explosive and incendiary, on the Essen region, which for generations had been the greatest German armament center.

First reports indicated that many huge fires were burning throughout the bombed region.

He stated that 35 British bombers were missing. This compared with 44 in the Cologne raid.

This was a loss of only 3.373 per cent of the planes engaged, against 2.93 per cent in the Cologne raid. Air force leaders, in planning the Cologne raid, anticipated a loss of 6 per cent; 10 per cent is the ceiling beyond which attacks become too costly.

It was emphasized, to show the growing might of the Royal Air Force, that every plane used last night was British made.

The four-motored giants, after dropping their loads of from five to eight tons each on the Ruhr, had hardly returned to base when swarms of bomber and fighter planes raced across the Dover Strait in this morning's daylight to continue what was again a round-the-clock offen-

The reports of returning pilots indicated that great areas of the Krupp Works had been shattered by more than 3000 tons of bombs ---6,720,000 pounds. The pilots said the fires compared to those set at Cologne.

Demolition bombs, some weighing two tons or more, were mixed with incendiary bombs.

The last raid was made on Essen March 25, when the Krupp Works were likewise the tar-

SPICE

Less spice, please. The war Production Board has cut in half the retail sale of seven spices: white pepper, allspice, cinnamon, cloves ginger, nutmeg and mace. Without this cut, the supply would be exhausted in six to nine months. Now we should get along for 12 to 18. If the war lasts long enough, black pepper will be next. Just now there is two years' supply on

Our ancestors would have found this more serious. In the Middle Ages spice was used in almost every dish. Strawberries would be about the last dish with which anyone would want spice. Yet a 15th century cookery book directs that strawberries be washed in red wine, put in a pot with almond milk and rice flour, boiled and then dosed with raisins, saffron, pepper, much sugar, powdered ginger and cinnamon. Then the mess should be made acid with vinegar, and a little white grease dded. By this time the dish should be free from any suggestion of strawberry flavor No wonder, with such use of spices, that Europe found it important to keep open the trade route to the Spice Islands of the Far East. If the war keeps on, we shall have to dig up some spice islands of our own.
