GOOD SELLING

For years the buying trend was down except for war materials. Apparently it was never going to stop. But now it has turned up over a wide front. And the buying is public as well as private. A county purchasing agent says he has had more people in to see him in one week now than before in three months.

"They're offering everything," he says, "but smart trucks particularly. The smart companies kept selling on the rounds just saying hello through the war years. Now the others have to catch up."

Such a tip might be worth passing on for any difficult period. One family which had to purchase a car during the war, and members of which suffered much at the hands of dealers who took no trouble explaining nothing, guaranteed nothing, and would not remember and patronize when possible the firm which was courteous and honest. Its square salesman and competent mechanic said pleasantly when complimented, "The Boss says we've been in business a long time and expect to go on. It's merely good business to treat you as a customer."

LIFE IN A POSTOFFICE.

If you want to know people, and know them well, know them better than I can tell. Know them like their mothers should. Know them better than they wish you would. Know their hobbies, their fails and whims. Most of their business (and some of their sins) in Postoffice. Just work in a Postoffice. If you want to lose all of your self-consciousness. Work hard with your hands, mouth, eyes, and feet. Get up early, go to bed late. Get "blown up" hourly, as sure as fate. Know everything human and divine. Speak the language of every class. Just work in a Postoffice. If you want to know everyone's Christian name. Their uncles and aunts, and from whence they came. The names of their kids, from babyhood up. The tabby cat and brindle pup. Their brothers, sisters, cousins, and beaux. And everything else that anyone knows. Just work in a Postoffice. If you want to know more than a mortal should. Of everything bad and everything good. About everyone who lives in your town. From the chief executive all the way down. Know all this and hold it in trust. Until you're so awfully well-liked by to bust. Just work in a Postoffice. —The Postal Supervisor.
